Pistol Is Seized, Police Question Two in Murder

Pair Taken 'on Street,
Experts to Examine Weapon on One.

Round-up Ordered
For Underworld

Gambling 'Spots' Shut
to Check Crime.

Police last night arrested two men, one carrying a 32-caliber pistol, and held them for questioning in the "mistaken identity" murder early Tuesday of Allen B. Wilson, 32, newspaper circulation man. Three others, previously arrested also are being questioned, although police believe they had no part in the crime.

The gun will be turned over to ballistics experts for comparison with bullets taken from Wilson's body.

The gun carrier's companion admitted, police said, he once had been picked up by police of Detroit, where he had lived several years.

Police said the men identified themselves as John M. Harris, 32, a merchant, of 1321 M street northwest, and Stiles B. Simmons, 33, no occupation, of 1436 R street northwest. The gun, according to police, was found on Harris. The arrests were made at Seventeenth and G streets northwest.

Gaming Jury Deadlocked.

While Harris and Simmons were being questioned at detective headquarters and while police were "clamping down the lid" on Washington's gambling and disorderly resorts as the lid never has been clamped before, a jury in District Supreme Court was discharged because it was hopelessly deadlocked in a gambling case.

The defendants in the gambling case—Harry Smith, Winfield F. Flagg, William O'Neill and Edgar J. Behrle—were arrested June 25. Each was indicted on four counts. Police repeatedly have said their efforts to end gambling here were handicapped by their inability to obtain convictions and their argument was heightened by last night's action in the midst of their efforts to clean up the Wilson murder.

Earlier in the day Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, ordered a concerted drive against crime in Washington and a general round-up of all known gamblers, gangsters and criminals.

Maj. Brown's order followed a two-hour conference with captains and inspectors. Maj. Brown was instructed to furnish headquarters with information regarding crime and vice conditions in his respective precinct. Individual patrolmen are to "check" the habits and activities of known police characters on their beats.

Maj. Brown was summoned to a conference with District Commissioners, held unexpectedly at 10 a. m., four hours ahead of the scheduled time.

Legislation to Be Asked.
After the conference, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen announced legislation for increasing the powers of police and prosecuting authorities against gamblers. Others also have been taken to headquarters, questioned and then allowed to go.

Gamblers Close 'Spots.'
Police started out to shut every place in the city where gambling is conducted, and they found that in many cases the gamblers had closed before police arrival to escape the "heat" being poured down upon the denizens of Washington's underworld.

Landreau Gets 2-4 Years for Estate Thefts

NORMAN B. LANDREAU.

Pleading guilty to eight charges that involved the embezzlement of $12,065.07 from the estates of two insane men, Norman B. Landreau, for 15 years a prominent member of the District bar, yesterday was sentenced to two to four years in prison.

Landreau had made arrangements with United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett to come in yesterday and plead guilty after he learned that the District grand jury was preparing to return a report.

Two indictments, each containing four separate charges of embezzlement, were returned against him.

U. S. Railroad Pension Law Ruled Invalid By D. C. Court

'Due Process' Lacking, Says Wheat, Granting Injunction.

Commerce Clause Declared Violated

Carriers Claimed Cost of 60 Million Yearly for 'Experiment.'

The railroad retirement act, described by the Nation's railroads as "a social experiment" that would cost them at least $60,000,000 a year, was declared unconstitutional by Chief Justice A. A. Wheat in the District Supreme Court yesterday.

The act, passed at the last session of Congress, set up a model system of automatic retirement for all superannuated employees. By its terms it directed the carriers to pay into the railroad retirement board fund a sum equal to 4 per cent of the employee's wages while the employees were to contribute 2 per cent of their pay, the two funds to be administered by the board as a pension pool.

The railroads fought the bill in the District Supreme Court on two broad grounds. The first was that the act contained provisions which were not within the "commerce clause" powers of the Constitution, and second, that to compel them to make retirement expenditures for all classes of employees, even those who have been discharged for cause, was, in effect, taking their property without due process of law.

Both Contentions Upheld.
With both those contentions Chief Justice Wheat agreed. He held that in the first place, the act is unconstitutional because it extends its provisions to persons not engaged in interstate commerce.

The retirement act confers its benefits upon all employees of any company to which it relates without regard to distinction between interstate commerce, intrastate commerce, or activities which do not constitute commerce at all.

"It was held," the opinion stated, "that one who engages in interstate commerce does not submit all his business concerns to the regulating power of Congress and that an attempt on the part of Congress to extend its regulatory powers to carriers of interstate commerce, regardless of their duties and the work performed by them made the act invalid."

The present act applies to all employees of the railroads. Indeed, there is no claim that it does not. It appears from the record in this case that some 200,000, approximately one-fifth of all the employees of the railroads, do not work in interstate commerce, or in work so closely connected therewith as to be a part thereof. This group, he said, was composed of "white collar workers."

Cites Intrastate Workers.
The proof shows that the Long Island Railroad Co., whose lines are wholly within the State of New York, the Illinois Central Railroad, and the New York Central Railroad, have a large number of employees engaged solely in intrastate commerce. It appears that the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad has physical property of the value of more than $7,000,000, which the Interstate Commerce Commission has classified as noncarrier. The New York Central has property to the value of $45,000,000, classified. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. has $17,000,000, and the Union Pacific $19,000,000. The employees engaged in work in connection with this property are included as beneficiaries of the act.

'Lend More!' Jones Urges Bank Heads

Cut Ranks of Idle,
Says Jesse Jones.

Loans must be granted more freely to advance recovery, Jesse Jones, Reconstruction Finance Corporation chairman, told the American Bankers Association yesterday.

Although earlier speakers from their own ranks insisted most bankers were making available more credit than business desired, the delegates reacted good-naturedly as the big Texan mildly remonstrated with them. He was generously applauded at intervals during his speech and when he finished.

The principal business of the convention was the election of Rudolf S. Hecht, New Orleans financier, as association president. Robert V. Fleming, Riggs National Bank head, was moved up to the first vice presidency. Tom K. Smith, of St. Louis, was chosen as second vice president without opposition.

His Attitude Conciliatory.
Jones kept his audience in a good humor by smiling when he used such words as "alibi" and "whisperings." His manner was conciliatory as he occasionally tempered his remarks with such restrained jibes as "put that in your pipe and smoke it."

In addition to more loans he advocated consideration of decentralization of credit control, less frequent bank examinations and reestablishment of a Nation-wide market for sound real estate mortgages.

"There can be no sustained prosperity and no return to normal conditions," Jones warned, "without actual bank lending for all legitimate purposes—even stipulated lending."

Insists Credit Must Flow.
"There is nothing new in this statement, but it can not be repeated too often, even at the risk of irritation. Credit simply must flow if our relief rolls are to decrease. It is far better to make some slow loans than to continue liquidation and increase unemployment."

"We sometimes hear bankers say that they do not want to lend because they do not know what kind of money they will be paid. I wonder if they expect the dollar in the vault to be any better than the dollar at interest. That argument falls about the flaccid of any war."

"I have said on more than one occasion and I am glad here to repeat it, that the dollar is the best money any patriotic American can have. To be afraid of your dollar is to be afraid of your country, and while those in that category are in the minority, their whistlings are easily heard."

Jones conceded most bankers want to lend, but quickly added that attitude was not well known among prospective borrowers.

"The feeling generally is," he protested, "that you are willing to make loans, but only on collateral that few possess."

"Banks must lend upon the security of the things that their customers have to offer, in fact they have sound value. In other words, Continued on Page 6, Column 1.

Roosevelt Urges Bank Leaders To Loosen Credit for Recovery

President Roosevelt addressing members of the American Bankers Association.

An Editorial

Three days' discussion at the convention of the American Bankers Association developed expressions of views on the part of bank and Government officials in which harmony was not pronounced. But at last night's meeting, addressed by the President, an obvious change occurred. Speaking for the association, Mr. Jackson Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of New York, expressed fair and generous appreciation of President Roosevelt's services to the banking community in March, 1933. He followed this with a sympathetic statement of the fiscal and financial problems which confront the Administration. In terse but pregnant words Mr. Reynolds pointed out the National importance of establishing and maintaining a harmonious cooperation between Government and banking.

To this the President responded, with his habitual felicity of expression, in a way which should go far toward building that spirit of "friendly understanding, sympathetic cooperation" for which Mr. Reynolds had argued. He pointed out that from the viewpoint of the Government, banking constitutes only one element in the community. But he left no doubt in the minds of his listeners that it is the Administration's aim to work cooperatively with, rather than in a spirit of hostility to, that vital element.

The President, in accepting the friendly expressions and offer of cooperation made by Mr. Reynolds on behalf of the bankers, has laid a foundation for better relations that promises well for the recovery program. Indeed, such a foundation may be considered essential to that program.

All this is the more appropriate, because no student of the history of banking can fail to come to the conclusion that, while its practice in this country has developed many grave abuses, no exclusive blame can be lodged against any one group of men.

The Government, indeed, was responsible for a banking structure which lent itself to malpractice. Such a structure, part State and part National, led to the competition between systems of banks which was bound to result, as it did, in a progressive weakening of the safeguards of sound banking. This was pointed out years ago to Congressional committees.

Much of the trouble arose from invasion of one kind of banking organization of the business of other groups. Recent laws have separated deposit and investment banking. The affiliates of the State and National banks, which were contrary to the spirit and probably the letter of the law, invaded the investment bankers' field. The investment bankers countered by invading commercial banking through investment trusts and holding corporations.

Without thorough study and analysis of the causes of the trouble, banking reform can not be constructively accomplished in the way that is so vital to safeguard public confidence in the future. For that reason, there can be nothing but satisfaction at the promise of harmonious cooperation between Government and bankers, large and small, to promote the interests of recovery.

A New Confidence Sought in Address

Finance Heads Urged to Show Faith in American People by Giving New Stimulus to Business.

HOLDS GOVERNMENT NOW READY TO CURTAIL ITS OWN AGENCIES

Accepts Olive Branch Offered by A.B.A.
Spokesman; Capacity Crowd Greet
President With Applause.

By Elliott Thurston.

President Roosevelt last night beckoned the bankers of the country into "an alliance of all forces intent upon the business of recovery."

Facing the greatest gathering in the history of the American Bankers Association, he figuratively accepted the olive branch extended to him on behalf of the bankers' convention by Jackson E. Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of New York, as spokesman for the largest, most influential banking forces in the country.

The occasion may prove historic as marking the end of guerrilla warfare between the New Deal and the banking world and the dawn of the cooperative, conciliatory spirit which Reynolds, in his overture speech, and Mr. Roosevelt in his response, sought to promote in the interests of economic revival.

Seeks to Allay Fears.
Mr. Roosevelt struck a series of notes throughout his speech designed to encourage common action on the recovery side and to allay the apprehensions which have been stalemating recuperation.

He spoke of his own personal interest in the recovery of the Nation and seeking "underlying agreement in the opinions that bankers have expressed."

He emphasized the responsibility of the head of government "to find among many discordant elements that unity of purpose that is best for the Nation as a whole."

He struck out at "the old fallacious notion of the bankers on the one side and the Government on the other."

The duty of government is threefold in its relations with bankers, he said. First, to promote public confidence in banks; second, to make that confidence "real and living" by securing the banks; third, to promote the confidence of the banks in the people.

Asks Confidence of Bankers.
"Tonight I ask the bankers of this country to renew their confidence in the people of this country," he emphasized. "I hope you will take me at my word."

Then after a glance back at the banking crisis and the steps taken toward "restoration of banking activity," he spoke of the Government's emergency credit agencies as purely temporary agencies for the day when normal banking functions are again in full play.

"I shall be only too glad to curtail the activities of these public agencies in proportion to the taking up of the slack by privately owned agencies," he declared by way of renewed assurance against lasting governmental penetration into the field of banking. This appeared to be not only a further promise that the Government means to withdraw—not keep or extend its domain—but also an effort to banish the specter of a central bank.

Again he stressed private, as against public activity, as he continued: "Just as it is to be expected that the banks will resume their responsibility and take up the burden that the Government has assumed through its credit agencies, so I as Continued on Page 3, Column 1.

Opinion Splits Upon Tugwell's Farm Program

World-Planned Economy Urged Fails to Win All Delegates.

Rome, Oct. 24 (P).—Bouquets and brickbats were cast today at Rexford G. Tugwell's concept of a world-planned economy in agriculture, as delegates to the International Institute of Agriculture alternately praised or assailed it.

Giuseppe Tassinari, of Italy; Fritz Koehler, of Germany, and Adam Rose, of Poland, lined up with Tugwell in his attack on the economic policy of "laissez faire," while F. L. McDougall, of Australia, and M. J. Irgens, of Norway, found much in his address to criticize.

Irgens quoted Tugwell's statement that "free trade is one of those simple, naive ideas which have an appeal to the untutored imagination," and commented that it still appealed to him.

"Europe's happiest period was when it had the most free trade," he said.

Jules Gautier, of France said he appreciated Tugwell's youth and enthusiasm, but declared France could not abandon her protection of agriculture because the farm was the backbone of the nation.

Tugwell's address, avoided use of the term "Planned Economy," but did advocate changes in the institute to support such a system.

He predicted a way to build "a more substantial structure of exchange" would be found "somewhere between international anarchy, which we call free trade, but which was never really free, and which has been subject to relevant, unbalanced and sometimes sinister private control, and protectionist nationalism, which logically would stop any trade at all."

Sankey Band Names Widow

She Was Aid in Kidnaping, Sentenced Men Say, at Second Trial.

Sioux Falls, S. Dak., Oct. 24 (P).—Two convict members of the notorious Sankey band of kidnapers went on the stand today in the Government's second effort to convict Mrs. Fern Mae Sankey, widow of their chief, of conspiracy in the $50,000 Charles Boettcher abduction.

In spite of defense efforts to halt his testimony, Ray Robinson, under 25-year sentence in the Minnesota Penitentiary for the Haskell Bohm kidnaping, in which he and the late Verne Sankey obtained $12,000 ransom, was allowed to finish his story that Mrs. Sankey had cooked several meals for Bohm while he was captive of the kidnapers.

Gordon Alcorn, who pleaded guilty to the Boettcher kidnaping and was brought here from Alcatraz Federal Prison, where he is serving a life sentence, to appear as a prosecution witness, followed Robinson to the stand.

It was expected that Alcorn's testimony, high spot of the Government's case and marking his second appearance against the widow of his confederate, might not be concluded before tomorrow morning's session. Mrs. Sankey's first trial for the abduction of the Denver broker ended in a jury disagreement.

Earlier in the day the Government obtained testimony from Thomas Dahill, former St. Paul chief of police, that Mrs. Sankey had admitted "looking over" the Bohm home the day before the kidnaping with her husband. Dahill also said Mrs. Sankey had admitted accompanying her husband on one of his trips attempting to collect the Bohm ransom money.

Nazis Deny Asking One Church for All

Jaeger Says Fight 'Solely of External Order.'

Berlin, Oct. 24 (P).—Dr. August Jaeger, Nazi commissioner for Prussia's Protestant Churches, today roundly denied he is trying to force all Germany's faithful into one national church.

"This claim," he said emphatically, "is 100 per cent untrue. Personally, I have never used the term 'National Church.' The fight within the church is solely one of external order."

His denial, ostensibly meant to all the waters troubled by the Reich's newest religious storm, was in direct contradiction, however, of previous Nazi statements.

Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller, focal point of the rebellion to Protestants and Catholics alike, said at Hanover last month: "Everyone should be forced into Nazi ranks even though he does not quite understand national socialism... the same applies pastors."

Jail on 'Blacklist' Of Justice Department

Adam Richetti, lieutenant of the late "Pretty Boy" Floyd, is confined in a prison which is "blacklisted" as insecure by the Department of Justice.

It is the Lisbon, Ohio, jail, which has been branded as unfit for confinement of Federal prisoners. After four prisoners had escaped from the prison in the last two years, the Department of Justice made a survey and concluded it had insufficient safeguards against jail breaks. All efforts to gain custody of Richetti were abandoned yesterday by the Department of Justice after Wellsville, Ohio, police repeatedly had refused to let Federal agents question him.

Speech Marks Shifting Trend, Wall St. Holds

Roosevelt's Willingness to Curtail Spending Is Observed.

New York, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—President Roosevelt's speech tonight before the American Bankers Association convention impressed Wall Street favorably.

There was a feeling the markets would react bullishly to the speech, although it was realized the utterances did not present any magic to dispel the unemployment situation, the need for heavy expenditures for relief, or make for a balanced budget or a stabilized dollar.

Tone of Speech Impresses.

Conservatives were not disappointed in the omission of these moot points. They held the speech could not honestly say at this time he would balance the budget when the relief burden was so great, and it would be equally difficult to arrive at a stabilized currency without world cooperation that seems lacking at this time.

More stress was placed on the conciliatory tone of the message to the bankers than to its content. It represented, in the opinion of the financial community, the first step in a complete rapprochement between banking and the Administration—an accord so necessary to real recovery.

Two points stood out, the statement of the President of the Government's willingness to curtail Federal lending activities as soon as private capital is able to meet demands of business and industry, and the reiteration of the capitalistic theory of wealth as the reward for labor of mind and hand.

Spending Trend Seen Shifting.

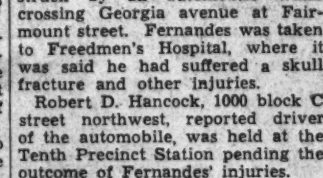

The New York Journal of Commerce found the speech "reflected a loss of enthusiasm within the Administration for spending our way to recovery by means of a badly unbalanced budget."

It appeared to those who studied the speech that the President was seeking to dispel fears that the Government would continue to make inroads into private business and banking. Once those fears are dispelled and there is indication of a relatively stable dollar, the capital market will be opened wide, say the experts. When that opening occurs, real activity on recovery will commence.

Gloria Informs Judge of Choice For a Guardian

But Preference Is Kept Secret; Mrs. Vanderbilt Reported Ill.

New York, Oct. 24 (P).—Ten-year-old Gloria Vanderbilt told Justice John F. Carew today whether she preferred to live with her mother or her aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, but the decision was sealed temporarily in supreme court records.

The heiress to $2,800,000, for whose custody a court battle has been raging, was questioned by Justice Carew in his chambers.

The child, it was learned, was given an opportunity to show what religious training she had received. She recited a number of prayers to the justice.

Her questioning also touched on incidents that occurred in her mother's Paris home, it was understood.

Gloria was brought from Mrs. Whitney's Long Island estate by Mrs. Whitney herself and carefully guarded.

Her surprise appearance came after Justice Carew had announced an adjournment until 10 a. m. tomorrow of the closed hearing in which Mrs. Vanderbilt is seeking her child's custody.

He said Mrs. Vanderbilt was ill. Her attorney, Nathan Burkan, said the trouble was with her heart, weakened by "punishment" in court.

Among the central figures in the case who waited in the courtroom while the interrogation was under way were Lady Furness and Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, sisters of Mrs. Vanderbilt, and Prince Hohenlohe, whose name was linked with that of Mrs. Vanderbilt by Mrs. Whitney's witnesses.

When court adjourned at noon, Mrs. Whitney, who seeks to prove Mrs. Vanderbilt an unfit mother, was on the stand.

Mrs. Vanderbilt's attorney tomorrow will make a plea that the press be admitted to the hearings so that testimony of his client's witnesses would be made openly, as was the case with Mrs. Whitney's early witnesses.

Lutherans Pledge Battle on Liquor; Pick Session Site

Savannah, Ga., Oct. 24 (P).—Pledging itself to oppose the "insidious evils and dangers of the liquor traffic," the United Lutheran Church in America closed its ninth biennial convention today with a vote to meet in Columbus, Ohio, in 1936.

The church ordered the publication of educational literature on temperance in the movement.

The church reaffirmed resolutions to call upon the whole Christian church to seek world peace.

Action on the question of seating women delegates in the church councils and convention was side-tracked for two years. The motion to defer followed heated debate.

Dr. J. C. Matter of Scranton, Pa., announced that at the next convention he would present resolutions asking that the terms of officers of the United Lutheran Church in America be lengthened. A six-year instead of a two-year term was hinted at.

Keystone G. O. P. Reports Expenses

The Republican campaign in Pennsylvania has cost $14,568 to date, Republican State and National committees yesterday disclosed in a preliminary report to the clerk of the House of Representatives.

A total of $175,826 in contributions was reported. Previous to the report, the Senate Campaign Expenditures Investigating Committee sent investigators into Pennsylvania, charging excessive campaign outlays.

Chairman James F. Byrnes plans to hold hearings in Pennsylvania and in Washington after the elections. He declined to disclose committee estimates of expenditures.

Paris, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—The guillotine which was used during the French revolution to behead 1,000 nobles and bourgeois was sold at public auction today for $1,980.

The buyer said he wanted the beheading machine to exhibit in a cafe near Tours, to attract trade. The guillotine has been kept for the last quarter of a century in the Church of St. Julien the Poor, near Notre Dame.

Nation's Old Heroes 'Evicted,' But They Make It a Hefty Job

Mass of Marble Moved to New Niches to Save Wear on Capitol.

By Robert C. Albright.

A weighty procession of the Nation's historic great moves stolidly out of Statuary Hall into the bare, marble corridors of the United States Capitol.

The great men move slowly, as if in protest. Even the gentle urge of a block and tackle fails to lift the spirit of resentment that seems to have fallen on the heavy assemblage of marble patriots.

Manager David Lynn, of the Capitol's hostelry, obtained the eviction order. This companionable huddle in Statuary Hall has been going on long enough, he said yesterday. He intends to break it up.

Besides, there is a definite limit to the number of tons of statesmanship even the Capitol's sturdy foundations will support.

Thirty Are Sent Out.

So yesterday Lynn ran over his list of hotel accommodations, found a vacant niche here, an unadorned corridor there, then assigned 30 or more of his stolid guests to new quarters. They can stay in the Capitol, he said, but this lobbying in Statuary Hall has got to stop!

Stephen F. Austin, of Texas, and Muhlenberg, Pennsylvania's Revolutionary "fighting preacher," led the forlorn procession. Austin, who felt his pioneering colonization of the Lone Star State entitled him to more consideration, took it hardest.

Perhaps. So a canvas drape was thrown over the patriot until he gets used to his new surroundings in the narrow vestibule between the hall and the Capitol rotunda.

Muhlenberg was more cheery about the thing. Lynn says he has to share the vestibule with Austin, but Muhlenberg is a man who can adjust himself. He proved that when he threw off his minister's garb for a soldier's uniform and led

Minot and Whipple To Get Nobel Prize

Official Award Due Today; Murphy Mentioned.

Stockholm, Oct. 24 (P).—The two most likely winners of the 1934 Nobel Prize for medicine, well-informed sources said today, are Dr. George Minot of the Harvard Medical School, and Dr. George H. Whipple, of the University of Rochester.

They were regarded as certain to receive the award jointly. The name of Dr. William P. Murphy, of Harvard, also was prominently mentioned, although a three-way division of the prize would be unusual. The official announcement is expected tomorrow.

All three men are well known for research in the treatment of anemia. Minot and Whipple in 1930 received the Popular Science Monthly's award for current achievement in science of the greatest benefit to the public.

'Lousy,' Says Race Winner, Shocking The British Press

London, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—Purists were shocked today when C. W. A. Scott said his spectacular flight to Australia with T. Campbell Black in the England-Australia air race was "lousy."

One newspaper substituted "rotten," while the London Times quoted Scott "dreadful."

Insull's Jurors Given a Lesson In Higher Math

But Judge Wilkerson Says Witness Must Do His Homework at Home.

Chicago, Oct. 24 (P).—The trial of Samuel Insull and his 16 mail-fraud codefendants today developed the unusual courtroom spectacle of a studious appearing young witness performing algebraic equations on a blackboard for the edification of the jury.

The introduction of higher education into the trial was not to the liking of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson, who held that the court's time was too valuable for such demonstrations, and instructed Alfred E. Sweeney, Government accountant, to do his home work to-night and bring it to court in the morning.

The algebraic equations arose in the cross-examination of Sweeney by Floyd E. Thompson, chief of defense counsel. Sweeney had testified that the Corporation Securities Co. was actually insolvent at the time it was selling its stock to the public.

Thompson wanted to know just how Sweeney had computed the liquidating values he placed on the corporation's assets.

While courtroom spectators listened with mouths agape, Sweeney told how he arrived at the liquidating value of the Insull Utility Investments, Inc., stock held by "Corp." It could be done two ways, he said. The first was by an arithmetical method known to accountants as "approaching a point," or "trial and error."

The second way, he said, was much simpler, and involved a formula which devolved itself into "X equals N plus A over B times X prime."

Sweeney then took the equation step by step and pointed out that by it he could determine the value of stock which one company held in another, and of that which the second company held in the first.

Plot to Slay Ruler Fails in Manchukuo

Kirin, Manchukuo, Oct. 24 (U.P.).—A purported plot against the life of the youthful Emperor Kang Teh, erstwhile "Son of Heaven" and last imperial ruler of China before the republic, was revealed by the Manchukuo authorities today. The former "boy emperor" is on an official tour of his new realm.

A band of heavily armed outlaws has been seized, officials announced. Ringleaders were reported to have been apprehended hiding at Kirin, capital of Kirin Province, where the 30-year-old monarch was scheduled to pause.

Insull's Jurors Given a Lesson In Higher Math

But Judge Wilkerson Says Witness Must Do His Homework at Home.

Chicago, Oct. 24 (P).—The trial of Samuel Insull and his 16 mail-fraud codefendants today developed the unusual courtroom spectacle of a studious appearing young witness performing algebraic equations on a blackboard for the edification of the jury.

The introduction of higher education into the trial was not to the liking of Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson, who held that the court's time was too valuable for such demonstrations, and instructed Alfred E. Sweeney, Government accountant, to do his home work to-night and bring it to court in the morning.

The algebraic equations arose in the cross-examination of Sweeney by Floyd E. Thompson, chief of defense counsel. Sweeney had testified that the Corporation Securities Co. was actually insolvent at the time it was selling its stock to the public.

Thompson wanted to know just how Sweeney had computed the liquidating values he placed on the corporation's assets.

While courtroom spectators listened with mouths agape, Sweeney told how he arrived at the liquidating value of the Insull Utility Investments, Inc., stock held by "Corp." It could be done two ways, he said. The first was by an arithmetical method known to accountants as "approaching a point," or "trial and error."

The second way, he said, was much simpler, and involved a formula which devolved itself into "X equals N plus A over B times X prime."

Sweeney then took the equation step by step and pointed out that by it he could determine the value of stock which one company held in another, and of that which the second company held in the first.

Eastman Seeks To Place Roads In Box Car Pool

Call to Rails Estimates Huge Savings; Force May Be Used.

Joseph B. Eastman, Federal coordinator of transportation, yesterday called on the Nation's railroads to pool their 2,500,000 box cars under the management of the newly organized Association of American Railroads.

This operation, put forth as a major reform, long overdue, in the Administration's program to rehabilitate the carriers, would save an estimated $100,000,000 annually, according to a report transmitted by Mr. Eastman to the railroads.

Declaring waste has increased progressively to the point that the annual "excess" empty-car mileage is now more than 2,000,000,000 miles, the report sets out a detailed plan under which all owners would surrender control of their freight cars to one central agency.

This recommendation was prepared by the coordinator's section of car pooling and addressing to the regional coordinating committees for their consideration, with the inference that, if not voluntarily adopted, some such plan may be ordered into effect by the coordinator or adopted by legislation.

Corporation Proposed.

Under the proposed pooling plan, all freight cars suitable for interchange service, including those owned by private car lines as well as the railroads, would be assigned to a corporation set up by the Association of American Railroads.

For the present, only ordinary types of box cars would be pooled, other types to be added when feasible. The ultimate objective of the pool, declares the report, "is to acquire ownership of cars assigned to the pool, together with necessary facilities for repairing cars, and to assume full responsibility for providing and maintaining a car supply adequate for the needs of shippers on all participating railroads."

The immediate objective is the acquisition by lease or contract of all cars of the type designed for pool operation and the formation of an organization for the operation of cars in a Nation-wide pool. No change in ownership is at present involved, and the plan will remain unchanged except for the addition of a pool designation.

Compensation Plan.

The report proposes that box car owners be compensated for the ownership costs of cars in pool service, based on the appraised value of the equipment. To offset this, the management would collect from car users a daily rental sufficient to meet this fixed charge, and would prorate the cost of repairs and operation among the railroads on the basis of car mileage.

Administration of the pool would be under a board of control consisting of two members from each of five railroad districts and a representative to be named by the coordinator or the Interstate Commerce Commission. In direct charge of operations would be a general manager, who would control movements through district managers located at the following headquarters:

Boston, for carriers operating in the New England district; Cleveland, Eastern district; Atlanta, Southeastern; Chicago, Western; St. Louis, Southwestern.

Estimate of Savings.

The car pooling section, headed by O. C. Castle, set at $75,000,000 the annual saving that would result from prevention of unnecessary cross-hauling of freight cars. The report adds $25,000,000 as the estimated saving in capital carrying charges by pool operation.

Figures in the report show that the ratio of empty-car mileage has grown from 47.3 per cent of the loaded-car miles in 1920 to 64.1 per cent in 1933. In other words, for every three cars in actual use two "empties" were hauled last year. This was due chiefly to efforts of the railroads to escape the present $1 per diem rent charged for foreign cars on each other's tracks.

The report says the railroads are engaged in "a competitive rush to shift the burden of car hire." An "inevitable" consequence, it adds, "is the creation of abnormal empty mileage made by cars of the same type and of equal availability for loading, moving empty in opposite directions."

Reaction to this latest proposal by Mr. Eastman awaited the return to the city of J. J. Pelley, new president of the Association of American Railroads, and R. V. Fletcher, general counsel. The railroads thus far have been critical of the idea of a car pool, advancing objections which the report attempts to answer in an appendix to recommendations.

One of Many Studies.

This report is on only one of numerous studies now being made by the coordinator. The findings are to be presented either to the railroads or to Congress. Among the others, which are expected to form the basis of legislation at the coming session, are reports on Government subsidies, direct or indirect, to all carriers; labor conditions of carriers other than railroads, and passenger traffic.

Upon a sympathetic attitude of President Roosevelt the railroads are pinning their hopes for action at the coming session on such questions as placing competing forms of transportation under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The President yesterday reaffirmed this sympathy to the extent of saying future RFC loans to the railroads for the purpose of buying equipment probably will carry interest as low as 3 1/2 per cent, compared with 4 1/2 last year.

their release, but then it was too late to take off for the next control point.

Under the rules of the handicap race time spent at control points does not count against the fliers, but time spent elsewhere is added to total flying time.

A stirring last-lap duel for second place in which the Dutchmen, K. D. Parmentier and J. J. Moll were victorious over Col. Roscoe Turner and Clyde Pangborn, Americans, captured the interest of excited race followers here, but when the tired fliers retired to seek much needed rest, attention was transferred to the missing Americans.

British Team Near Goal.

Cathcart Jones and K. W. Waller, of England, fourth team to reach Australian soil, landed at Charleville, control point 786 miles from the finish line, at 8:50 a. m. today (10:50 p. m. Wednesday, G. M. T.), after flying from Mount Isa, where they found overnight shelter.

With the first and second speed prizes already won, the remaining ships struggled toward the finish line, their pilots hopeful of placing in the handicap division in which times and "pay loads" will be checked.

The $50,000 first prize for speed went to C. W. A. Scott and Campbell Black, English pair, whose record-shattering time of just under two days and 23 hours left their rivals far in the rear, while the Dutchmen had the option of claiming either the first handicap prize, $10,000—if their rectified time is good enough to win it—or second speed prize, $7,500.

Turner Prize Uncertain.

Should Parmentier qualify for the handicap prize, Turner would get the $7,500, since no flier under the rules of the race could win prizes in both divisions. If the second speed prize went to the Dutch, the American team would win third speed prize, $2,500.

To claim any of the prizes, the derby competitors must complete the 11,300-mile course in 16 days or less.

Expected to be next to touch Australian soil was Squadron Leader Malcolm MacGregor, of New Zealand, oldest pilot in the race, who took off at Batavia, Java, at 8:52 p. m. G. M. T. for Rambang, Dutch East Indies.

J. E. Hewett and his copilot, New Zealander, were at Bangkok; Lieut. M. Hansen, of Denmark, flying solo, together with Squadron Leader D. E. Stodart, was at Calcutta, while Allahabad was host to C. J. Melrose, of Australia, solo flier.

Two Vessels Race 10,000 Miles With Arab Date Cargo

New York, Oct. 24 (AP).—Two rusty British freight ships reached America today after racing every foot of the 10,000 miles between here and the Persian Gulf with the new crop of Arabian dates. Each tried to beat the other all the way, across the Arabian Sea, the Red Sea, the Mediterranean and the Atlantic.

All the 1933 supply of fresh Arabian dates was eaten in the United States several months ago, and the rest vessels to land with the new crop was offered a premium.

The Steamship Almira, with a crew of 14, won the contest. The ship docked in Brooklyn at 2 p. m., 34 hours ahead of the Steamship Kohistan. The cargoes of the vessels are valued at $2,000,000.

The Kohistan is a faster ship, making the voyage in 23 days, but it never was able to catch up with the Almira, which got under way three days earlier.

At sundown the crews of both vessels spread down their prayer rugs and, with their faces toward Mecca, gave thanks to Allah.

Extension Granted In Park Land Suit

Ickes Is Given Till Nov. 7 to File Answer.

Secretary Ickes yesterday was given until November 7 to answer the request of former land owners in Shenandoah National Park that the Government be prohibited from accepting the park lands, according to the Associated Press.

The answer would have been due tomorrow, under the usual court rule allowing 30 days for filing answers to injunction petitions. Justice F. Dickinson Lett signed the extension.

In the proceedings Robert H. Via of Hershey, Pa.; John J. Mace, of Groveton, Va.; and Charles M. Mace, of this city, asked that the Government be forbidden from taking the lands from Virginia on the ground that the intent of Congress was violated by the manner in which the State acquired the property.

Blaze Is Fatal To Mother and Two Daughters

Investigation Will Be Asked Into Fire at Franconia, Va.

The State fire marshal's office will be asked to investigate the fire that claimed the lives of a mother and two daughters yesterday morning at Franconia, Sheriff E. P. Kirby, of Fairfax County, Va., said last night.

Meanwhile, arrangements are being completed for a triple funeral service for Mrs. Nellie Wise, 40, and her daughters, Beatrice 18, and Francis 13. The service will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. in the Sharon Chapel, at Franconia, with interment in Sharon Cemetery.

According to Fairfax County authorities the fire was discovered shortly before 1 a. m. yesterday morning by Mrs. Wise, who awakened her husband, Phillip Wise, 43, a Navy Yard machinist.

Wise made three attempts before he found his way downstairs. He called to his wife to take the two girls onto a rear porch roof while he obtained a ladder and roused their son, Woodrow, 20, who was sleeping downstairs.

The women had reached the porch roof safely when the youngest girl remembered her cat and crawled through the window for it. She was followed by her mother and older sister. The father placed the ladder against the porch roof, but was driven back by the flames. He finally reached a window and attempted to climb through, receiving severe burns about the head and shoulders.

He again attempted to enter the blazing dwelling but, police said, was prevented by his son and A. J. Condey, of Alexandria, who was attracted to the scene by the flames. Neighbors were aroused and called the Alexandria Fire Department. The firemen kept the blaze from spreading to the nearby dwelling of Henry Wise, father of Phillip.

The bodies of the mother and two daughters were recovered shortly before dawn. They were within a short distance of each other. Dr. C. A. Ransom, Fairfax County coroner, viewed the bodies as they were removed and stated that he would issue a certificate of accidental death.

Wise said yesterday that he believed the fire started from a stove or defective chimney. The fire destroyed the two-story dwelling, garage and other small outbuildings. Two dogs, a large number of chickens and several hogs perished in the outbuildings.

Mrs. Wise was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Javins, who live about a quarter of a mile away from the Wise home. In addition to her parents, husband and son, she is survived by five sisters: Mrs. Maude Dove, Mrs. Bessie Dewey and Miss Mary Javins, of Franconia; Mrs. Edna Pearson, of Newington and Mrs. Nannie Evers, of Wilmington, Del., and three brothers, William, Thomas and Irving Javins.

Beatrice Wise graduated from the Lee-Jackson High School in 1932 and has been employed at Kann's Department Store in Washington. Frances was a freshman in the Lee-Jackson High School this year.

Army Probes Liquor Claims

War Office Acts on ABC Report of Sales at Fort Monroe.

The War Department said today a complaint by the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board against sale of liquor at the Chamberlain-Vanderbilt Hotel, on the Fort Monroe military reservation, was in the hands of Third Army Corps headquarters for investigation. The Associated Press reported.

Pending the report of Maj. Gen. Paul B. Malone, the Third Army Area commanding general, the department said, no action would be taken by the department.

A law of long standing forbids the sale of intoxicants on reservations used for "military purposes" and it was indicated on good authority that the final decision would be based on that statute.

Construction and operation of the Chamberlain-Vanderbilt was authorized by special acts of the Virginia General Assembly, which originally had granted the property to the Government for National defense purposes. A clause that would have returned title of the land to Virginia should it have been used for purposes other than National defense, necessitated enactment of the special legislation.

Rail Pension Act Held Invalid; Carriers Granted Injunction

The President gave his approval he made a statement explaining his action, in which he said, among other things:

"Decision on this bill has been difficult."

"He (the President) gave as among the 'principal arguments against the measure':

"(a) The Federal Coordinator of Transportation, at much public expense, is now engaged in a thorough survey of the whole subject of employment security on railroads. He requested many months ago that legislation be deferred until the completion of these studies and the filing of his report."

"(b) The bill, although much improved in its final form, is still crudely drawn and will require many changes and amendments at the next session of Congress."

Earlier in his opinion, the Chief Justice wrote:

"Section 1 of the act includes as employees entitled to its benefits everyone who has been in such service within one year before the enactment thereof. The evidence discloses that about 143,000 men left the service of the railroads during that year and were not in such service on the date of enactment, and that of this number approximately 80,000 probably will not return to the railroad service. Some of these men were dismissed for the good of the service. I can see no reasonable relation between giving these men the benefits of the act, and the regulation of interstate commerce."

"Furthermore, the act provides annuities for all persons who, at the time of its enactment, were, or within the period of one year before its enactment had been, in carrier service and who had attained, or thereafter should attain, the age of 65 years, or had completed, or thereafter should complete, 30 years of such service."

Prelate Scores U. S. Christians Living in Japan

Fail to Practice Religion There, Bishop Reitaner Tells Institute.

Urging practice of religious principles in every-day life, the Right Rev. Charles Shriver Reitaner, D. D., Suffragan Bishop of North Tokyo, Japan, addressed religious educational leaders at 80 Washington parlors at the opening session of the annual meeting of the diocesan Sunday School Institute in Epiphany Church yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Reitaner, who is president of St. Paul's University in Tokyo, declared that "the great obstacle to Christianity in Japan is the American Christian who, away from the country, whose church-going is in vogue, reveals the shallowness of his faith by not being a churchman in Japan. Such examples of shallow faith emphasized his thesis that you can not be a leader of your flock except you lead a life of prayer."

The convention was opened by the Rev. William R. Moody, rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, chairman of the religious education department for the diocese. Following a supper served in the parish hall, the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, addressed the meeting.

"Religious education," said Dr. Hart, "is sharing with our children what we and others have found to be true about God." Convinced that there is an undiminished constructive worth in movies, Dr. Hart described the duty of religious educators as two-fold: to work for better movies and to produce better church schools.

Five new members were elected to serve with the diocesan department of religious education, as follows: Dr. Hart, the Rev. William H. Hame, the Rev. Walter P. Plumley, Miss Frances Abbott and Miss Emma Abbott.

Jones Insists Bankers Lend More Freely

RFC Head Goes Before Session With Plea on Credit.

"banks should not feel that they are buying the collateral that they are lending upon but must have some faith in the owner working out his problems and paying his debts."

"We are all too prone to liquidity, which in large measure is a myth. We kid ourselves when we think we could pay our depositors on short notice—that is, any considerable number at any one time."

He cautioned a continuation of forced liquidation would put the Government "further" into the lending business.

He said to encourage borrowing by people with known ability to use money profitably would create employment and emphasize banks should make loans they would be willing to carry for several years.

The RFC chairman stressed the need for reformation of bank examination policies.

"Fewer examinations of all banks and strict enforcement of bank laws is desirable," he contended, "and would serve the purpose. Furthermore, there should be one examination—a joint examination—when necessary—for all governmental agencies having to do with banks."

Concerning talk that the RFC has invaded the private banking field, Jones observed:

Explains RFC Policy.

"We would like your cooperation in making industrial loans. We would greatly prefer to participate in these loans with the Federal bank and have the bank service the loan, sharing with the RFC in the security and repayments. It would be generally helpful if the banks, the Federal Reserve and the RFC would work together in making these loans."

"The RFC only wants to make these loans where the credit is not otherwise available and to that end we solicit your cooperation. Many bankers alibi their refusal to make loans or their efforts to force collections by blaming the bank examiner instead of being frank with the borrower or debtor and trying to find a solution that would be helpful to both."

"In our efforts to make industrial loans we have found that it is often possible for the prospective borrower to put his loan in such shape that the bank can make it without participation by the RFC or the Federal Reserve."

His view of legislative needs included: "I am also inclined to the opinion that a further decentralization of credit control is worthy of consideration. There is still a great deal of concentrated power, and Congress might look further into the question of interlocking directors and control by influence."

Would Limit Deposits.

"I should also like to see our banking laws amended, limiting the amount of deposits that any bank may accept to a fixed proportion of its sound capital. A ratio of eight to one should, in my opinion, be the limit."

"I agree that this limit could be safely increased in exceptional cases, but laws must be passed that fit the majority and not the minority."

"Such laws, properly enforced, would be the best deposit insurance that we could possibly have and the least expensive."

He listed the big problems facing the RFC as reestablishment of the real estate mortgage market and necessary assistance to railroads.

He cited Washington conditions in his discussion of the mortgage situation.

"Many buildings such as apartments, hotels, office buildings, stores, warehouses, factories, etc., covered by mortgage bonds and now in receivership," he added, "may be safely reorganized, both in the interest of the bond holders and the equity holders and without loss to the new money in certain types of new building projects may be financed on a sound basis."

Cites Loss on Bonds.

"There are several important buildings in this city now in receivership, whose bonds have sold at a fraction of their real value because there was no fair market for them and no money available to reorganize the properties and take them out of receivership."

"This is true of the principal cities of the country, and as a rule investors in these mortgage bonds or mortgage certificates are people who can ill afford to lose their savings."

"We have found in many closed banks perfectly good mortgages current as to taxes and interest, that have matured or are maturing, which could be safely extended or taken over by a going concern. There are also many frozen mortgage loans in closed banks or otherwise that could be revamped and made current on some basis."

Bankers, Jones said, should take an interest in the general welfare of the country as well as their own institutions.

Holds Danger Is Over.

"The storm is over," he said, "and while many banks still have their problems there is no longer danger and the banker must do more than his full share toward National recovery."

"It is a big task finding work for the unemployed and the banker can help more than any other class. It is the responsibility of the banks, business and industry to mold and distribute the products of agriculture and labor for the use of all and in a way that everyone may have a share."

"I would remind you, lest we forget, that the entire banking situation was saved by the constructive policies of the Roosevelt Administration. If it had not been for those policies, made effective largely through the RFC, many banks that are now strong and sound would have been in the discard and others would have had a hard time maintaining their existence."

Jones, with a note of pride in his voice, told of solution of RFC in

Huge Crowd Hears President's Plea for Cooperation

Here is a view of a part of the huge crowd which heard President Roosevelt's speech in Constitution Hall last night. Thousands who were unable to gain admittance heard the speech from loud speakers.

Investments in Real Estate Are Defended

Percentage of Loss on Loans Comparatively Low, Says Banker.

Real estate investments have stood up surprisingly well during the depression, Will C. Wood, vice president and manager of the Bank of American National Trust & Savings Association, Oakland, Calif., yesterday told the savings bank division of the A. B. A.

"The percentage of loss on total real estate loans the country over is less than the percentage of loss on commercial loans and on total bond investments," he said.

"This is true," he added, "in spite of the fact that a large percentage of real estate loans have been flat loans."

Era of Transition Seen.

Dr. L. Douglas Meredith, commissioner of banking of Vermont, warned that banking is in an era of transition and urged bankers to prepare themselves to move forward with the times.

Government competition in the banking field is making it more difficult to attract private capital to investments, Henry S. Kingman, treasurer of the Farmers & Merchants Savings Bank, Minneapolis, told the savings bank division.

He told the bankers to look for lower interest rates on savings in the near future as a result of the competition.

Citing postal savings as an example of the Government competition, Kingman said:

Attacks Postal Savings.

"The avowed purpose of postal savings, to afford banking opportunities to people in districts without banks, has not been fulfilled. There exists, then, no real reason for further continuance of postal savings."

"The invasion of private industry by Government and the supplanting of private credit by Government credit have served to reduce to a minimum the use of bank deposits in commercial or investment fields."

Two other division meetings were held during the afternoon: the State secretaries section and a third and final session of the constructive customer relations clinic. All the addresses were of a technical nature.

74. Twice Jilted, Sues.

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Demaries B. Burnes, 74, today told a district court jury, John Jacob Moore, 72, twice promised to marry her and twice married some other girl. She asks $10,000 in her breach of promise suit.

Interest and dividend rates to an average of 4 per cent.

"To be of further assistance in recovery," he explained, "we have recently advised our agencies to be lenient with our borrowers and to grant extensions for as much as five years where desired, and where our collateral will not suffer."

Gives Aid to Closed Banks.

"Partial payments are preferable and will be expected, but we prefer that our borrowers use part of their funds for other purposes than paying their debts to the corporation when they can do so to their own advantage."

"We have authorized loans aggregating $1,000,000,000 for distribution to depositors in closed banks, and, as recovery proceeds, we hope to be able to make further advances to some of these institutions. But by and large, according to our best information, our loans about equal the probable net liquidating value of the collateral. Of these closed bank authorizations, $635,000,000 has been distributed and $264,000,000, or 41.5 per cent, repaid."

Another speaker, J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, declared Federal insurance of bank deposits "helped to restore confidence and bring money back from hiding."

Amos 'n' Andy Crash de RFC And Mortgage de Taxi for $2

Startled Board Obeys Jones' Order That Check Be Drawn.

(Associated Press.)

Interrupting a grace conference between the RFC Board and financiers, "Amos 'n' Andy" recently obtained an official Government loan of $2. They plan to hold the check only as a souvenir, however.

As the story was recounted yesterday, the team of Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll had been waiting to pay respects to their friend, Chairman Jesse Jones. When the clock got perilously near the time for their next stage appearance, they just walked into the meeting room.

"Gentlemen of the Deconstruction

Finance Corporation," intoned Amos before the surprised conferees could protest, "me and Andy wants to borrow $2. We is building Weber City."

"Dis is a model city, where candidates for office can make speeches when dey ain't got no chance to talk at no other place. We gives you as security a cattle mortgage on de taxicab, our personal note and Andy's hat. And we wants de two bucks right now."

Jones assumed a serious demeanor, refused the hat, but said the taxicab mortgage would be acceptable. He ordered the check drawn. The startled board acceded.

In a few moments the check was exchanged for the duly signed mortgage.

Personal greetings were exchanged, and the comedians went their way. The RFC session proceeded as before.

'Dictatorship' Won by Banker

J. P. Warburg Warns Rigid Regulation Threatens Tyranny for U. S.

Philadelphia, Oct. 24 (AP).—James P. Warburg, New York banker and critic of some of the Roosevelt Administration policies, said today "Government control and regulation of economic factors," if permitted to continue, will result in "a surrender of our freedom to the dictatorial tyranny created by our own indifference."

If these policies are carried to their logical conclusion, "we will abandon democracy," the banker declared in an address before the Philadelphia Rotary Club.

His speech was delivered in the same room in which, a year ago while addressing another gathering, he disclosed his break with the Administration.

"As time goes by," he said, "and as one experiment succeeds another—as 'turns to the right' and 'turns to the left' follow upon each other in rapid succession—I still see the New Deal rapidly slipping toward one of the two oldest deals in the world, if not toward both."

"There is nothing new about National bankruptcy. There is nothing new about dictatorship."

School Teacher, 23, Accused Of Passing 27 Bad Checks

Virginia Girl Was Educated in Five Colleges, Taught in That State, Maryland and in Boston, She Tells Police.

Baltimore, Oct. 24 (AP).—A pretty, well-dressed school teacher was arrested here today on charges of passing 27 bad checks totaling more than $400 during the last six months.

Detectives said the young woman, who claimed to have studied at five different colleges and universities and to have taught in Maryland, Virginia and Boston schools, admitted passing the checks. She told them, they said, she cashed them to keep up appearances and feel at ease among well-to-do persons with whom she had been friendly during the last few years.

For the last ten days she had been living at a downtown hotel, registered under the name of Ruth Brownley. The officers said her real name was Miss Catharine Bousman. She is 23 years old and came from Penhook, a small town near Roanoke, in southwest Virginia.

She was arrested last night after bad checks bearing various signatures had turned up at different stores and business establishments in this city.

Miss Bousman told the detectives she studied at Brenan College, Blackstone College, Randolph Macon Woman's College, the University of North Carolina and the Johns Hopkins University. She once held a research fellowship in the Hopkins Graduate School.

She said she had taught English in different Virginia and Maryland schools and at a Boston, Mass., school of expression.

Trade Failures Rise in First Of October

Dun's Insolvency Index Is Increased Over Sept. Figure.

New York, Oct. 24.—Dun's insolvency index for the first ten days of October was 65.6; this compares with 53.6 for the month of September, an advance of 12 points. The increase from September this year was unusually high. For the five years, 1928-32, inclusive, when conditions were in most respects quite normal, the increase from September was from 57.2 to 60.2 for the later month, an advance of only 3 points. Usually failures are more numerous in October, after the low point of the year has been touched either in August or September, and the record for the remainder of the year continues to show a further increase until the opening month of the new year.

For the year, 1933, when insolvencies had steadily declined in number from the very high total in January, in almost every month to the end of the year, the insolvency index was 77.1 for the early part of October. The latter figure was 7 points higher than for the month of September in that year. The decline from January to September in 1933 was 111.6 points; this year it has been 28.9 points, while for the five years, 1928-32, inclusive, the average was 52.3 points.

The insolvency index so far this year is compared below for several years, the figures being computed on the basis of the number of commercial insolvencies to each 10,000 firms in business:

Man Is Sentenced In Death of Two

Samuel Vincent Convicted of Auto Fatality.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 24 (SPL).—Convicted of manslaughter in connection with the death of William C. Marker, 42, and his mother, Mrs. Bertha M. Marker, 61, of Locust Valley, when a truck loaded with beer he was driving demolished the automobile of the Markers, Samuel Vincent, 23, of Winchester, Va., today was sentenced by Judge Woodward to 15 months in the House of Correction.

The trial, at which 15 witnesses testified, occupied the entire day. Mr. Marker and his mother were returning from a church service the night of July 12, when their automobile was struck by the truck on a hill near Knoxville. The Markers were killed instantly. Howard Marker, son of the dead man, and Vincent were badly hurt. Testimony of State witnesses showed that the truck, descending a hill, failed to keep to the right at a curve.

Jury in Richmond To Scan Bank Case

American Bank & Trust Closing to Be Studied.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Commonwealth's Attorney T. Gray Haddon announced today that within the next few weeks he plans to have a special grand jury summoned to investigate the closing of the American Bank & Trust Co. of Richmond.

He said his investigation, which has been under way for nearly two months is nearing completion. It was interrupted by his duties in connection with the special grand jury investigation of the escape of Mals and Legenza, convicted gangsters, from the Richmond City Jail.

Civil phases of the American Bank case, including a suit of receivers against stockholders, are scheduled for hearing in City Circuit Court next month. The special grand jury will be called, however, to look into possible criminal phases of the matter, Mr. Haddon said.

Tornado Hits CCC Camp Killing 4 War Veterans

Maryville, Mo., Oct. 24 (AP).—Wrecked barracks, resembling a village bombed by siege guns, yielded a fourth victim today as inspecting army officers decided in favor of immediate reconstruction of the CCC camp for war veterans, stricken yesterday by a tornado.

The body of Harvey Drake, 38, was found wedged between two buildings.

Two other soldiers may die. Damage to the camp was estimated at $7,500, but a check-up elsewhere in this northwestern Missouri city sent the total figure toward the million dollar mark.

President Asks Aid of Bankers For Recovery

Appeal Urges Stimulus to Business Through Credit Resources.

some and expect that private business generally will be financed by the great credit resources which the present liquidity of banks makes possible.

"Our traditional system has been built upon this principle and the recovery of our economic life should be accomplished through the assumption of this responsibility."

In the next breath he reiterated the same thought—that the Government, through the Treasury, Federal Reserve System, RFC, the Securities Exchange Commission, and the housing administration, seeks "to facilitate and encourage the revival of private investment."

He spoke of these agencies all "seeking consultation and cooperation with you bankers."

Then, in what was an allusion to the vital, vexing issue of the budget, he said:

"While there lies before us still the necessity for large expenditures for the relief of unemployment, I think we should all proceed in the expectation that the revival of business activity will steadily reduce this burden."

"I am gratified to know of the expressions of belief, 'public and private, of your members, that the speed that we shall make toward this objective is something that no one has the wisdom or the hardihood to estimate.'"

This was a saying that positive assurance as to when the budget could be balanced was beyond his power to say with sincerity or assurance—and an acknowledgment of what he termed "a growing appreciation of the problems resting upon a responsible Chief Executive."

Touches on Stabilization.

As for the basic problem of dollar stabilization, which has torn and tormented the banking world, he said:

"With respect to international relationships, I have been glad to note the growing appreciation in other nations of the desirability of arriving, as quickly as possible, at a point of steadiness of prices and values. This objective of a greater steadiness we have constantly kept before us as our national policy."

He commended bankers and business men for the greater stability they were devoting to study of the problems of government. He reverted to the keynote of cooperation again by saying, "Wealth grows when men cooperate, but it stagnates in an atmosphere of misunderstanding and misrepresentation."

"Here in America," he declared, "the material means are at hand for the growth of true wealth."

"It is in the spirit of American institutions in wealth should come as the reward of hard labor of mind and hand. That is what we call a profit system."

Stage Set for Reconciliation.

"It is not in the spirit of partisans, but partners," he said, "that America has progressed. The time is ripe for an alliance of all forces intent upon the business of recovery."

In such an alliance will be found business and banking, agriculture and industry, and labor and capital. What an all-American team that is!"

And finally he added, "The Nation does not merely hope to hope that we will do our duty. The Nation is justified in expecting that we will do our duty."

Presiding over this largest, most important convention gathering of the bankers was Francis Marion Law, president of the A. B. A., who has been a prime mover in the often difficult movement for a new spirit of cooperation between the New Deal and the bankers as a paramount necessity in forwarding recovery.

Reynolds in Peace Role.

He was to have made the introductory speech, but at Mr. Roosevelt's own suggestion, that responsibility, in the extension of the olive branch, was put upon the shoulders of a representative of the New York banking community, Mr. Reynolds, head of one of the country's oldest, greatest banking institutions, who is known to the bankers of the country as a symbol of established financial, banking and monetary orthodoxy.

Briefly, but with effective emphasis to proclaim the bridging of a breach which had steadily widened until last night, Mr. Reynolds appealed for an end of antagonisms and for "sympathetic cooperation." This, he declared, would be "a great contribution toward the perpetuation of our cherished institutions, the encouragement of our fellow citizens, and the gradual and sound rebuilding of the shattered economic and financial structure of our country."

Roosevelt's Tone Changes.

Though the speech fell short of the absolute, of the certainties which many bankers wish for on the budget, currency, stabilization and other questions, it was recognized by others as going a long distance in dedicating the New Deal to orthodox basic principles. It was on the side of reassurance. And above all it signified a vastly different spirit.

No line or intonation in the speech suggested the unfriendly tone of the President's recent radio speech, in which his invidious comparison of American with British bankers served only to intensify bitterness and resentment.

Though some speakers at the convention have, in group sessions, led back at the White House, the atmosphere last night was free of discords and gave promise of a better teamwork that holds out fresh hopes of so reviving confidence as to break the log-jam in private financing.

Mr. Reynolds set the stage for reconciliation in his carefully prepared speech, setting the "vi-

New Heads of Bank Women's Group

Miss Susan B. Sturgis, left, of Boston, was elected president of the Association of Bank Women yesterday. Miss Anne Houston Sadler, center, of New York, was named vice president and Miss Ellen C. Whitney, right, of Boston, recording secretary.

Text of the President's Address

The text of the President's speech before the American Bankers Association follows:

I am glad to be here tonight at your invitation to speak to you informally about some of our common problems. As many of you know by personal experience it is not a new thing for me to talk with bankers. I have been seeing many of your number almost daily during the past year and a half, and let me make it quite clear that in these meetings I have not done all the talking. I have been a good listener and I have asked many questions. I have found there is the striking lack of unanimity of opinion among bankers that characterizes many other groups in the country. It has been my purpose to seek out underlying agreement in the opinions that bankers have expressed.

A true function of the head of the Government of the United States is to find among many discordant elements that unity of purpose that is best for the Nation as a whole. This is necessary because government is not merely one of many coordinate groups in the community of the Nation, but government is essentially the outward expression of the unity and the leadership of all groups. Consequently the old fallacious notion of the bankers on the one side and the Government on the other as more or less equal and independent units has passed away. Government by the necessity of things must be the leader, must be the judge of the conflicting interests of the groups in the community, including bankers. The Government is the outward expression of the common life of all citizens.

Tells of Government Aims.

What is a bank and what are its relations with the people? Why do the people through their government supervise banks? They do this in order to protect it and in some cases to have it earn a small income. It costs money to provide this service and, therefore, the banks are permitted to invest these deposits in order to pay their expenses and to provide a reasonable profit to their stockholders. The public has no means of knowing whether the bank is making safe investments, so it turns to its Government to supervise the bank. Government has accepted this responsibility.

In its relation with bankers, the purpose of government should be threefold. First, to promote the purpose of the country's bankers and those whose duty and responsibility it is to administer the affairs of the country.

He asked three rhetorical questions of the bankers, the first one on the point that the destitute and unemployed must be cared for. "As I put this question," he said of the second one, "I know, to men who, from high motives and deep conviction, believe as I do, that the solvency of this Nation rests on a balanced budget."

"May we not be in error," he asked, "in expecting too early a date at which, even with the strictest economy and integrity of administration the budget may be balanced; and can any one of us fix a precise date when such balance can be attained without fear that our prophecy will be made ridiculous by subsequent events?"

Refers to Stabilization.

And the third question referred to the President's difficulties as to permanent stabilization in the face of uncertain factors abroad and inflationary demands at home.

Here was appreciation of the limitations upon the President—with out sacrifice of the principles which the orthodox bankers hold. And the sympathetic, conciliatory spirit was stressed in his final query, "whether it is not better for the country and for us to modify the manner of the presentation of our views."

The stage thus set, the vast, eager audience, which overflowed Convention Hall evidently expected a warmer response from Mr. Roosevelt than he actually gave. He had been greeted with a sustained applause which evidenced the anxious desire of the bankers for both light and harmony. The tempo was enlivened by the Marine Band. Four members of the Cabinet, Secretaries Morgenthau and Roper, Postmaster General Farley and Attorney General Cummings were on the platform, along with Chairman Jesse Jones of the RFC, White House Secretary Early, President Law of the A. B. A., the incoming president, Rudolf S. Hecht, of New Orleans, and the new vice president, Robert V. Fleming, of Washington.

When he had ended his speech, which was punctuated with occasional applause, the audience seemed somewhat puzzled. The applause was respectful but short of real enthusiasm.

the confidence of the people in banks and banking in view of the important service that banks and banking may perform for the people as a whole. Second, to make this confidence a real and living thing by assisting banks to render themselves useful and worthy of this confidence through wise supervision. A third purpose now offers itself, and I wish with all earnestness to press this point tonight. Government should assert its leadership in encouraging not only the confidence of the people in banks, but the confidence of the banks in the people. In March, 1933, I asked the people of this country to renew their confidence in banks. They took me at my word. Tonight I ask the bankers of this country to renew their confidence in the people of this country. I hope you will take me at my word.

Sees Confidence Regained.

I need not recount the situation of the banks in the spring of 1933. I found that the restoration of banking activity itself was my first responsibility on assuming office. It was necessary that the Government throw itself squarely into the task of bringing back to the banks the deposits of the citizens of the country. As a result of my appeal the people responded by restoring their confidence in the banks of the United States.

The primary purpose accomplished it became necessary that the Congress and the Administration enact measures to build up the banking structure so that it could once more provide support for the economic life of the country. Moreover, it had to be built and we built it strong enough so that it could resist future stresses and strains. Government found it necessary to create and get under way new emergency credit agencies and to use to the fullest extent the already existing Reconstruction Finance Corporation. These credit agencies moved with heroic energy, and it was a source of the utmost satisfaction to find that when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation went into operation the banking structure had regained a very considerable amount of its strength and its vitality. I think it is only fair to say that never since the formation of our Government has such a task been achieved in so short a time. Happily, the great security of our banks bears witness to the wise course that we pursued.

I find almost general agreement among bankers that these agencies must continue until such time as the banks and other private credit agencies are themselves able and ready to take over these lending functions; and when that time comes, I shall be only too glad to curtail the activities of these public agencies in proportion to the taking up of the slack by privately owned agencies. I venture to suggest to you that when the history of these years comes to be written, while the closing and the reopening of the banks will occupy a prominent place, even greater interest will be centered in the fact that within a few months not only was the banking structure strengthened, but the great Governmental lending agencies went into action and also saved from disastrous deflation, liquidation and loss a vast portion of the farms, homes, railroads and corporations of the Nation. This definitely rescued the security and happiness of all of us.

Wants Business Aided.

Just as it is to be expected that the banks will resume their responsibility and take up the burden that the Government has assumed through its credit agencies, so I assume and expect that the private business generally will be financed by the great credit resources which the present liquidity of banks makes possible. Our traditional system has been built upon this principle and the recovery of our economic life should be accomplished through the assumption of this responsibility. The present steady and unmistakable revival of public demand for goods and services should provide the assurance necessary to the financing of industrial life. The Government is bending every effort through the Treasury, the Federal Reserve System, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Housing Administration to facilitate and encourage the revival of private investment. I commend the objectives of the Housing Administration to your immediate consideration, but at the same time I ask you to note that all of these new agencies are seeking consultation and cooperation with you bankers.

While there lies before us still the necessity for large expenditures for the relief of unemployment, I think we should all proceed in the expectation that the revival of business activity will steadily reduce this burden.

I am gratified to know of the expressions of belief, public and private, of your members that the speed that we shall make toward this objective is something that no one has the wisdom or the hardihood to estimate. This recognition reflects a growing appreciation of the problems resting upon a responsible Chief Executive.

Takes Up World Prices.

With respect to international relationships, I have been glad to note the growing appreciation in other nations of the desirability of arriving, as quickly as possible, at a point of steadiness of prices and values. This objective of a greater steadiness we have constantly kept before us as our national policy.

The fact that American business men and bankers are devoting more and more individual study and attention to the wider problems of our Nation and of international affairs is manifesting itself in many ways. It seems to me that this is a very important development. Let me make it clear to you that the Government of the United States has daily, and even hourly, contacts with sources of information which cover not only every State and section of our country, but also every other portion of the habitable globe. This information is more complete, informative and accurate than that possessed by any private agency.

I need not tell you that true wealth is not a static thing. It is a living thing, made out of the problems of our Nation and of international affairs. It is a thing that grows with the growth of true wealth. It is in the spirit of American institutions that wealth should come as the reward of hard labor of mind and hand. That is what we call a profit system. Its real fulfillment comes in the general recognition of the rights of each factor of the community. It is not in the spirit of partisans, but partners, that America has progressed. The time is ripe for an alliance of all forces intent upon the business of recovery. In such an alliance will be found business and banking, agriculture and industry, and labor and capital. What an all-American team that is! The possibilities of such a team kindle the imagination—they encourage our determination, they make easier the task of those in your Government who are leading it.

The Nation does not merely trust or hope that we will do our duty—the Nation is justified in expecting that we will do our duty.

Italian Seaplane Breaks Old Mark By Over 16 m.p.h.

Desenzano, Italy, Oct. 24 (AP).—An official timing of 709.209 kilometers (440.679 miles) an hour was established today for yesterday's seaplane flight of Lieut. Francesco Agello, nicknamed "the Crazy Boy" of Italian aviation.

The new record—the fastest man ever has traveled—is 27 kilometers an hour faster than the previous record of 682.8 kilometers (424.822 miles) an hour, also held by Agello. He established that record here on April 10, 1933. Agello received a promotion today and said that now he was able to marry.

Virginia Rules Those Aided by Federal Agency Keep Citizenship.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Attorney General A. P. Stamps today gave Gov. Peery the opinion that persons forced to move out of the Shenandoah National Park area who acquire homes with the aid of the Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation will not lose their status as Virginia citizens.

The ruling also stated that children of such families will still be entitled to attend public schools of the State.

The question of the children's status was raised by the State Board of Education and was referred by the Governor to the attorney general.

Mr. Stamps' opinion was that although the subsistence corporation, financing new homes for the people of the park area, is a Federal body, it has no jurisdiction over the lands which it acquires and that it sells on easy terms to the homesteaders.

Speaks for American Bankers

Jackson Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of the City of New York, who presented questions uppermost in the minds of the bankers at the meeting of the American Bankers Association addressed by President Roosevelt last night.

Text of Reynolds' Speech

Following is the text of a speech made by Jackson Reynolds, president of the First National Bank of the City of New York, before the American Bankers Association last night:

My remarks will be brief, simple and earnest.

Because of events with which we are all familiar, there exists today, I regret to confess, evidence of misunderstanding between many of our country's bankers and those whose duty and responsibility it is to administer the affairs of the country. I am profoundly convinced that this contributes to the ills from which we are suffering and I believe its removal will greatly promote the welfare of the country. I should like to address a few brief observations to the bankers tonight in the form of question, to which I ask no vocal response, but only that you shall answer them to your own secret selves.

Poses Three Questions.

The answer to the first question will be unanimous, but the answer to the second and third will be various. The first question is: Is it avoidable that either through private philanthropy or the appropriation of public funds the destitute, unfortunate and unemployed must be cared for?

Second (And I put this question, I know, to men who, from high motives and deep conviction, believe, as I do, that the solvency of this Nation and the prosperity of its people rest on a balanced budget) May we not be in error in expecting too early a date at which, even with the strictest economy and integrity of administration, the budget may be balanced; and can any one of us fix a precise date when such balance can be attained without fear that our prophecy will be made ridiculous by subsequent events?

Third (And I put this question, I know, to men who passionately believe, as I do, that without monetary stability we face chaos) If any one of us had the grave responsibilities and duties of the President of the United States, and were facing, as he is, international monetary instability abroad and diverse demands for inflation at home, would we at one stroke both tie our hands vis-a-vis the currencies of Europe and the Orient and risk consolidating into one irresistible program the inflationary demands here, by making a statement today that the very definite stabilization of the dollar effected last January and since maintained should stand for all time and under all circumstances?

I pose three questions only, but there are many more that all of us can envisage. In this highly perplexing state of affairs, are we not justified in expecting wiser decisions, more likely to be productive of good for our country, if we abandon an attitude of antagonism for one of cooperation? By this I do not mean to suggest any surrender respecting what we believe to be principles of sound finance or any abatement in our insistence upon the utmost economy and integrity in administration. But I do submit in all earnestness the query whether it is not better for the country and for us to modify the manner of the presentation of our views.

Bankers Ready to Cooperate.

And with the foregoing in mind, Mr. Reynolds, I feel that the banking fraternity in the last two years has endured enough mass punishment so that it is now in such a chastened and understanding mood that you can accept with hospitality any overture of cooperation on the part of the leaders of that fraternity.

As I conclude I wish to make two statements which I sincerely believe to be true. The first is: In the last 27 days of March, 1933, President Roosevelt contributed more to rescue and rehabilitate our shattered banking structure than any of us did individually or collectively. For that service to us, and through us to our country, he deserves our sympathetic and helpful response, and in addition he deserves, and I am sure he will receive, the warmest and most reasonable criticism of any proposed Governmental policies respecting the banks.

My second statement is: If the Government and the banks continue in the role of antagonists, it will involve the gravest consequences to our country, perhaps even the destruction of many institutions and principles we have long held dear. The poor, whom we have always with us, will not be much worse off. The rich will survive in comfort at least, as they always have, but the great stratum of our people between these two groups will be irretrievably ruined. If, on the other hand, we abandon our antagonism for friendly, understanding, sympathetic cooperation, I believe we can make a great contribution toward the perpetuation of our cherished institutions, the encouragement of our fellow-citizens, and the gradual and sound rebuilding of the shattered economic and financial structure of our country.

More Haste, Less Speed.

A conspicuous illustration of the undependability of hasty and ill-considered legislation is furnished by the decision of the District Supreme Court in the case of the railroad retirement act. In declaring this law unconstitutional Chief Justice Wheat did not hesitate to observe that its many admitted defects tempered "the natural reluctance which a judge feels when compelled to hold an act of Congress unconstitutional."

Like the Frazier-Lemke measure, the railroad retirement act was approved with hesitation by the President, who stated that it would require many changes and amendments at the next session of Congress. But the carriers, confronted by the necessity of making heavy payments under a law which they regarded as confiscatory, did not wait to see what revisions Congress might later be disposed to make.

The upshot is that a measure which had much to commend it in principle has been at least temporarily thrown out because of the absurd and overreaching clauses which were slipped through the legislature under gag rule and steam roller tactics. Even from the viewpoint of ardent proponents of the measure, time has been wasted, not gained. The only satisfaction to be gained from the episode lies in the hope that it will prove a lesson which the forthcoming Congress will take to heart.

An Urge Eternal.

Man may not be the fighting animal that Von Bernhardi thought him, but that man is essentially a racing animal none will deny. The evidence was never more conclusive than in the news of the last two days.

A streamline train endeavors to cross the continent in 60 hours; averaging nearly a mile and a half a minute as it flashes by. The Picards return from a ten-mile ascent into the stratosphere. Italy's "crazy boy" aviator sets a new short-distance speed standard: 440 miles an hour. Kingford-Smith promises to fly from Australia to California more rapidly than anybody has ever yet made that flight. And those other British air-expressmen, Scott and Black, complete their 11,300-mile dash from London to Melbourne, at an average speed of 165 miles per hour, in less than three days—over 91 hours ahead of the previous record.

These endeavors and achievements are marvelous when considered separately. They are far more marvelous when considered in the perspective of history—for they are really mere relays in an age-long relay race. That primitive man who first rigged a sail to his log-canoe started a contest which has never ended. He started a contest fed by some irreplaceable instinct, forced forward by some immortal madness. All down the ages, this urge has worked upon his descendants. Even before the war its effects were surpassing the wildest guesses of Jules Verne. Now, in our own day, it overtops the shrewdest of Wellesian prophecies. Nor do we seem yet to have reached the limits of communication, the ultimate barrier to exploration. The human race still races furiously forward against sullen space and inimical time.

Prizes For Poets.

For several years Poetry: A Magazine of Verse has been more than generous in its encouragement of contemporary poets. There was a time when to appear within its fold was to be set off as one akin to a particularly long-haired Dadaist. Under the calm guidance of Miss Harriet Monroe the slim, and usually orange-jacketed publication has run the gamut of poetical emotions of the times. But on the whole it has been sound, intelligent, and open-minded in its viewpoint. These are enough reasons why, after more than 20 years, it can not be counted among the many little magazines that died to set verse free.

Annually Poetry awards prizes. We have an idea that they do not afford the winners a chance to indulge in an excess of luxury, but among those who take their art seriously, to be recognized by Poetry means almost as much as for a reporter to be recognized by Pulitzer. This year's awards show conclusively that the lively awareness so long associated with Miss Monroe's magazine has not been dissipated with the passing years.

Horace Gregory, whose clear-cut prose is familiar to many who take criticism more seriously than poetry, is the first to be honored. Mr. Gregory is not a name that makes the literary headlines, but there is a purity and honesty about his writing that sets it apart. His choice will elate those who know him as a young and straightforward craftsman, who talks very little about standards but who has set some, which are quite severe, for his own guidance.

Jeane Stuart, a Kentuckian, whose poetry has been likened by Mr. Gregory to the love letters published at the recent "American Tragedy" trial, is also honored. The author of "Man With a Bull Tongue Plow" is a regionalist whose verses, some crude and some inspired, are wrought out of Kentucky soil and imprinted with the character of Kentucky hills.

Both the polished Mr. Gregory and the unburned Mr. Stuart deserve such recognition as may come to them by these awards. The same may be said of Hildegard Plummer, whose California lyrics are meritorious. But we think the real award should go to Poetry itself, for its lengthy service to American letters and its dogged insistence upon existing in a period when art is not particularly encouraged.

Stabilization—Then And Now.

Ambassador Bingham's advocacy of stabilization of the dollar-pound ratio, made in an address at Edinburgh on Tuesday, must be taken as indicating that the Administration is no longer opposed to discussion of a subject that President Roosevelt summarily tabooed in his famous message to the London Monetary Conference in the summer of 1933.

Of course, endorsement of stabilization in principle does not necessarily imply willingness to grapple immediately with the numerous problems that will arise when stabilization negotiations begin. Nevertheless, the implied change of attitude on this important matter is significant. It shows that faith in our ability to revive foreign trade and speed domestic recovery by lowering the exchange value of the dollar is rapidly waning, if it has not altogether expired.

Our Ambassador to Great Britain urges a return to stable currencies as a means of benefiting this country and the rest of the world. A little over a year ago President Roosevelt was asserting that the "sound internal economic system of a nation is a greater factor in its well-being than the price of its currency in changing terms of the currencies of other nations." At that time the President declared his preference for a commodity dollar that would have an unvarying purchasing and debt-paying power. He told the delegates to the London conference that this objective "means more to the good of other nations than a fixed ratio for a month or two in terms of the pound or franc."

Since then we have had an opportunity to test the efficacy of currency devaluation as a cure for domestic depression and as a stimulus to foreign trade. The results have been bitterly disappointing to the Administration. As was predicted, new obstacles to trade expansion have resulted from the further uncertain and erratic fluctuations in world currencies. Plans to mitigate existing embargoes and facilitate exchange of goods, announced by the President as preferable to "temporary exchange fixing," have been blocked by the lack of exchange stability. Instead of freer trade, new barriers have arisen to counteract the effect of unfair competition from countries with depreciated currencies.

Recognition of that fact is found in a memorandum of the United States Department of Agriculture submitted at the recent meeting in Rome of the International Institute of Agriculture. One of the topics listed for discussion reads as follows: "International monetary cooperation as a means of eliminating one of the principal motives existing at the present time for the imposition of trade barriers." This statement may not be an official "feeler," but it undoubtedly indicates an aroused perception in official quarters of the demoralizing consequences of the present condition of exchange instability.

Many difficult questions have to be settled before existing currency chaos can be overcome. But if the two leading trading nations of the world—the United States and Great Britain—could agree upon a fixed dollar-pound ratio one of the major causes of trade disturbances would be on its way to elimination.

Rational Protection.

Chairman Crowley, of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, did not confine his address before the American Bankers' convention to general statements that the Government is not out to "gain power or control, but only to help."

Such assurances are undoubtedly welcome, but they have added force when, as in this case, they are backed by specific proposals of a constructive nature. Mr. Crowley proved that he meant what he said when he outlined his recommendations for a revision of the deposit insurance law, along lines calculated to allay the fears of responsible bankers.

Pledging his cooperation in efforts to secure modifications of the permanent insurance plan, the chairman of the FDIC asks for elimination of the unlimited liability features of the law, limitation of insurable deposits to the present maximum of $5,000 and definite annual premium payments by the insured banks. As further protection for the fund itself and for depositors he emphasizes the necessity of strengthening the capital structure of the banks and insisting upon sound management.

Sound management would certainly be discouraged if the banks of the country were to be brought under a system of deposit guaranty imposing upon them unlimited liability to meet the losses of banks which fail. Retention of limitations upon amounts insured, and restrictions upon the liabilities assumed by insured banks, would go far toward meeting the objections of those who regard the proposed permanent system of deposit guaranty as a direct encouragement to irresponsible practices.

In recommending severe restrictions upon the chartering of new banks, and suggesting methods of strengthening those already functioning, Chairman Crowley is proceeding upon the rational theory that prevention of failures is essential to save the public from losses due to failures. His references to the strain upon deposit insurance funds resulting from too comprehensive plans and from weaknesses within the existing banking structure show a realistic appreciation of the dangers that inhere in deposit insurance.

Safety for depositors must be found in the promotion of good banking under private initiative. That appears to be the gist of the message conveyed by Chairman Crowley to the assembled bankers. If it also reflects the viewpoint of the Administration there is ground for hoping that Congress will heed the warnings of banking experts and modify the law along the lines suggested by the chairman of the FDIC.

Dodging The Issue.

Some of the inevitable consequences of arbitrary crop reduction are obviously causing anxiety at AAA headquarters. Secretary Wallace has expressed hope that "it is realized that we are unable to attain that much-desired goal—maximum production and a higher price per pound." His reiteration of this self-evident fact is important largely because it indicates that he is taking cognizance of our diminishing cotton exports.

Nothing can be gained, however, by an attempt to deny that the high price of American cotton is tending to drive it out of the export market. "The rise of American cotton prices under the Agricultural Adjustment Act," says Mr. Wallace, "is not the circumstance which has brought about the reduction of American cotton exports in recent months." The really important cause of this reduction is the inability of some nations to obtain dollar exchange. From this assumption he concludes that increased foreign purchasing power, rather than lower American prices, is necessary to maintain the foreign demand for cotton.

It is probably true that Germany's cotton purchases have been curtailed partly because of an acute shortage of foreign exchange. But during the first month of the present cotton export season shipments to Great Britain were more sharply curtailed, in comparison with last year, than those to Germany. The total volume of shipments fell 50 per cent; shipments to Germany, 52.7 per cent. Such a radical shrinkage in the market for American cotton can not be satisfactorily explained by exchange difficulties.

Secretary Wallace's argument would be more convincing if this decline in American cotton exports had not been accompanied by expansion of cotton sales by other countries. Last year, even before the full effect of the Bankhead act could be felt, consumption of foreign growths increased 13 per cent while consumption of American cotton fell 4 per cent. A number of countries are sponsoring campaigns to increase cotton acreage simply to take advantage of the curtailment program in the United States.

The disparity between cotton prices here and abroad has been notably widened. A recent study showed that Indian cotton was selling in Liverpool at an average price amounting to only 67 per cent of the average price for the American product. In 1932 the same Indian cotton sold for 89 per cent of the American price. The present disparity is a strong incentive for substitution of the foreign product, whenever possible.

Greater purchasing power abroad would of course react favorably upon the cotton market. But so long as such price disparity exists, foreign producers may be expected to reap the chief benefits. Whether purchasing power is strong or weak, trade flows where prices for similar goods are cheapest.

No Authority.

Samuel J. Solomon, it appears, has offended the law. As manager of the Washington Airport, he is perturbed over the probability that a plane may collide with an automobile on the highway which bisects the landing field. After numerous attempts to close the highway had failed, he erected a traffic signal to halt cars at the edge of the field when a plane takes off. But he had no authority to safeguard the public from this potential death trap. Neither, it seems, has any one else.

Motorists may or may not heed this strange traffic signal, because it is unofficial. A collision almost occurred when an Army truck driver ignored the warning. Even so, the signal serves a useful purpose in the absence of any other safeguard against a tragic accident at Washington Airport. Mr. Solomon fears, however, that he may have to remove it because he failed to secure official permission to warn motorists against driving through a landing field while airplanes are in motion.

In any other city such a struggle to eliminate a patent hazard to life would sound either fantastic or ridiculous. In the Nation's Capital the difficulties of Mr. Solomon in trying to prevent a tragedy is unfortunately typical of the manner in which the airport problem has been handled. A child can recognize the danger of maintaining an open highway through a metropolitan terminal for airlines. But Congress has repeatedly failed to order it closed. The District Commissioners have no authority over Military road, and the War Department is waiting for specific instructions. In the meantime there is grave danger of a major tragedy that will center attention upon this outrageous situation—too late.

Construction of an airport for Washington is a big undertaking. No mistake should be made in its location, and the cost must be kept within reason. But that is no excuse for the delay, indecision and neglect which keeps the present field an unsafe makeshift. A fatal accident resulting from this comedy of errors doubtless would result in quick remedial action. It is a pity that the community must wait helplessly under this menace until the laborious wheels of legislation grind out a decision that could be made by a competent executive in half an hour.

Letters to the Editor

That Central Bank.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The daily press prominently features the happy tidings that the Administration will combat the efforts of the inflationists (including those audaciously dubbing themselves "The Sound Money League") who are advocating the establishment of a Government bank or central monetary authority. But what matters the name, if we are to have the game? For we quickly read on to learn that two important compromises will be assented to in effecting "a little more reworking of the Federal Reserve System." Authority is to be given to the President to name the governors of the reserve banks, and measures are to be taken further to tighten Federal control over the member banks' absorption of Government debt.

Now, the two main objections to schemes for a central monetary authority are that all checks on unbridled spending and inflation would be removed and that our National monetary system would be kicked around as a political football. Obviously, the two aforementioned compromises directly and fully embrace these evils. They insure the more complete and permanent functioning of the Federal Reserve System as the servile doorman of the Treasury Department. The only brake on budgetary inflation will be the slight inconvenience entailed in "hocking" Government bonds back and forth within the banking system. The Administration proclaims that it is opposed to "inflation" and to a Government central bank. Fine! But let it have the necessary consistency and courage to fight these evils when they appear in slightly disguised forms!

A. WILFRED MAY.

Hits And Errors.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: About the first thing which struck my eye in the morning's Post of October 21 was "Car Hits Pole: Two are Injured." There was a time when it would have aroused my sympathetic interest. But "Car Hits Pole" is so frequently in newspaper headlines that it long since has lost its shock.

Now and then car hits tree, another car, jackwalker, or safety zone. That is natural enough at the present rates of speed, lawful as well as lawful-plus. But "Car Hits Pole" doesn't sound to me exactly right. Does a pole hit a car? Or is it a car that hits a pole? The question may spring from some mental quirk on my part. But maybe your Post Impressionist could think up an idea in regard to it.

Anyhow, gone is the intriguing effect of "Car Hits Pole." Some day pole may hit car and there will be a kick in it as when a man bites a dog.

The Best Policy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I pride myself on three things—honesty, truthfulness and good judgment. I am a Democrat and nearly 70 years old.

I did not vote for President Roosevelt on the grounds that I did not think him the man for the place and did not seem to have the qualifications, but he seems to have the honesty to tell the world that he makes mistakes.

It Is Not!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I beg leave to congratulate Mr. Elderman on his amusing cartoon, "For Display Purposes," and The Post's excellent editorial, "Exploiting Relief," in the same issue.

The independence of The Post is evidently not in the market at the price of favors.

The Work Test.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am writing to express my appreciation for your editorial entitled, "Applying the Work Test," in The Post of October 22.

The plan of coordination of the activities of the local relief administration and this office—which has been worked out by Miss Alice M. Hill and myself—we feel does represent a constructive step in relief administration and handling of employment opportunities through this public agency.

From the standpoint of the employment service, however, I have one particular hope in the application of this program, namely, that employers who have positions to offer may continue to realize that our basis for selection for referral is solely that of suitability of the applicants. On this basis, alone, do we feel that we can build up the type of efficient employment service to which you referred in your editorial. Our plan is to coordinate our activities with those of the relief administration, but we do feel that it is necessary to maintain in the public mind a distinction between employment and relief work.

Thank you again for your cooperation.

Crime and Punishment.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From William Meyers' recent letter one must infer that he evaluates personal experience higher than scientific and professional research and experiment. The conclusion he reaches from his experience is that crime will continue until the Government adopts revolutionary methods and hastens more criminals to the killing machines.

If the gentleman will make a study of crime, he will find that sure, speedy and widespread death has been tried over long periods and has done nothing but make more and more criminals. The removal of an existing crop of criminals. Not much over a century ago our so-called English justice was swift, sure and unrelenting, but crime was not eradicated. If we are going radically to lessen crime we must do so in a scientific way by using our heads instead of our feelings.

The present hysteria is only a result of unusual conditions and excessive publicity. If publicity were stopped for two weeks every one would quiet down and the slow but steady progress in crime prevention and cure would resume its upward trend. For such unusual stress crime conditions are not bad and the authorities have done splendid work despite all the criticism.

Most of us will never die from criminal action and very few of us will ever have any calls from criminals. In fact, we can go safely to sleep with a percentage of 99.99 per cent in favor of no disturbance from criminals.

Glad You're Pleased.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am writing to tell you that the comforters I won at the Post Cooking School were delivered to me yesterday. Cooking School.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am glad I am a subscriber of The Post. It greets me every morning when I open my apartment door and I welcome it as I would a dear friend.

It gives me mental stimulus for the rest of the day. It is clearly printed, easy on the eyes. Its news is up to date. Facts and statements are dependable and reliable. It is not sensational but spells refinement.

Also let me speak a word for the cooking school, as I attended every session. The meetings certainly went off with a bang. I have attended many cooking schools, but never any that had the crowds and the real interest that this school had. I tried out two of the dishes today and they were fine. To me, cooking is an art and makes for happier homes and better husbands and children.

For Earlier Roosting.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As the weather grows cooler and more bracing, the number of hikers seems to increase, and this last Sunday's flock of "Wanderbirds" was the largest for some time.

Not the least attractive feature of the hike was the campfire and the clear air stirred at the close of the day. It might offer a suggestion it would be that some of the hikers may have Sunday evening engagements and that it would prove agreeable to them if the return to Washington could be arranged by 8:30 or 9 p. m. Japan's Naval Policy.

The Japanese people are, of course, aware of the serious implications of a race in naval construction that would not for a moment think of provoking such a race by their own action. But it must be said that, much as we dread the very thought of an armament race with other powers, the need for guaranteeing our National security as of such overwhelmingly greater importance in our eyes that if such a race is forced upon us through the refusal of other powers to listen to our contentions, the Japanese people would be prepared to take up the challenge. Their minds being made up on this point, neither the threat of an armament race nor the thought of its dire consequences to the nation could possibly shake them.

As to what plan the Japanese government will formulate to cope with the disarmament situation, the writer is, of course, in no position to know at this early date. But it may be said with confidence that no plan will satisfy our people unless the following points are incorporated therein:

1. Early removal of the disadvantageous restrictions of the existing treaties.
2. Abolition of discriminatory ratios.
3. Guarantee of national security.
4. Acquisition of autonomy in national defense.
5. The realization of a logical disarmament regime through voluntary reductions on the part of powers now most highly armed under the existing treaties.

What Japan is demanding, in the last analysis, is absolute equality in the right of national existence. And all we ask to that end is that the powers now most strongly armed should carry out reductions of their own accord so that all the nations concerned may enjoy an unperturbed sense of security. That is the reason for our confident belief that the acceptance of the Japanese proposal, when it shall be presented, by the other powers will enable all the nations concerned to feel secure as to their national defense and will conduce to economy of naval expenditure and the furtherance of the cause of world peace.

Women and Work.

Postoffice, Thursday.
WASHINGTON has far more "women gainfully employed outside the home" than most American cities. Those women will be interested to hear that two others believe the tide of women in business to be ebbing.

"After 30 years of obscurity, the vocational title of 'housewife' has again achieved prestige. An upward trend in the occupation is obvious, and a phalanx headed homeward is significant of a changing social order."

That is what one of the investigators says.

"There is a distinct increase in interest among college women toward a home. The number of students choosing child-study is greater than the number majoring in any other subject."

That's the report of the second investigator.

The first investigator recalls: "Around the turn of the century, when a determined band marched forth in search of careers, the home began to lose caste. . . . In time, career-women concentrated such attention on their exploits and compensations that the advantages falling to the lot of the housewife were obscured. . . . Home-keeping as an occupation completely lost prestige."

Marie L. Darrach is responsible for these statements. Writing in the Commonweal, she admits that there is no statistical information on the present number of housewives in the United States—and this is a grave weakness in her argument. Yet she asserts that there are at hand "other data."

"From various sources, one learns that women in increasing numbers are abandoning the road to economic independence blazed by their pioneer sisters, now 'that the industrial era in which many of them have figured so prominently is about to close.'"

Miss—or is it, perchance, Mrs.?—Darrach appeals to colleges and to norms and trends furnished by employment managers and personnel directors.

One college authority sustaining the Darrach thesis is that "second investigator" we have already quoted. She is Director of the Department of Euthenics at Vassar. And if you are as uncertain as we were about what euthenics may be, we assure you we are now reliably instructed that they are the Science of Effective Living.

It appears that Vassar has found 60 per cent of her graduates getting wedding rings—and presumably thereafter getting homes to manage—almost as soon as they get their college diplomas.

That Vassar, having long ago adequately provided for instruction in other careers, realized its duty to do something about this 60 per cent. So it introduced the course of child-study herebefore mentioned. The course is now open to men and home-making in general its most popular subjects.

But what more about women already "gainfully employed outside the home?"

The Darrach declarations assert that many who have made a living in business are now regretting it. "According to a recent survey showing the median salaries" of such women, "this country has been no land of golden opportunity, and for this reason, if for no other, they intimate that, if they were planning their lives over again, a home, instead of an independent career, would be their choice."

Miss (Mrs.) Darrach goes further: "Home-keeping is already offering a fertile field for superior intellects. The business career represents a more valuable contribution on the part of women than the releasing of their energies into the business world."

Nor do the Darrach investigations see much in the compromise which women suggest in order to cope with the disarmament situation.

"A personnel director said that women had grown tired of contributing 85 per cent of the time and energy and 50 per cent of the funds necessary to maintain a home when both husband and wife have jobs. The compromise of combining business and a home has never been an unqualified success. Too often it has developed a none too desirable sense of freedom from responsibility in men, without adding very materially to the economic independence of women."

There it is, you women of Washington gainfully employed outside the home!

But don't hold us responsible for it. We have merely reported it. We have been a simple disk. If it accuses any sensations in our breast they are those of curiosity. We wonder:

Can that Vassar home-making course be popular because it is a snap course?

Have those ladies who want to turn their backs on their business careers been successful in business?

And does a husband whose wife earns money really feel free—or does he feel dependent?

But, even then, we are asserting nothing.

We are only asking.

Farm of Marijuana Bared in Brooklyn

By Ralph E. Renaud.
NEW YORK, Oct. 24.—Bagdad, ancient stronghold of the Khalifa, winks an electric eye from its world map and projects itself into the news with the flight of the London-to-Melbourne flier. But Bagdad-on-the-Hudson, or Bagdad-on-the-Subway, as O. Henry delighted to call New York, never gets out of the news. There are small episodes lifted from the mosaic of happenings which make the pattern of metropolitan life go far this week to prove his contention that there is not another such romantic or unexpected spot on earth.

The first concerns the agricultural interests of New York City. The average spectator, viewing its brilliant skyline of towers, or its congested slums, would scarcely suspect that New York is a farming community. And, perhaps, by and large, it isn't. But the children of the city, stimulated to depression garden plots, have just held an exhibition of the fruits of their toil, a kind of country fair, with prize pumpkins, squashes, tomatoes and jocular what-nots, including pastoral daisies. And here and there are real, professional farms on the outskirts of the Bronx and especially in Queens, where wide acres of rich green square set against suburban housing projects, sometimes cultivated by smocked Chinese in parasol hats of thatch. The latest to turn up is a dream farm.

It didn't look like a dream farm, but that's exactly what it was. It was like a Brooklyn back yard choked with weeds, but it wasn't anything of the sort. When police garnered the weeds, piled them up, sprinkled the pile with gasoline and lit a bonfire, they destroyed a $50,000 crop. It was marijuana. Marijuana is a Mexican shrub and medicinally a pronounced toxic and stimulant. It is said to produce a state of exaltation and hallucination, with less after-effect than the opiates. It is made into "reefers" and then into dreams. It is today the most popular smoke in the underworld and it is said that the crop in that Brooklyn back yard would have supplied half the trade in New York for a year. The remainder is smuggled in from Mexico.

Long up in unexpected quantities both in Harlem and on Governors Island among the soldiers. A couple of detectives were called in by the military authorities, put into Uncle Sam's uniform as raw recruits and told to do their duty. It is today the most popular smoke in the underworld and it is said that the crop in that Brooklyn back yard would have supplied half the trade in New York for a year. The remainder is smuggled in from Mexico.

HERSE's another for the O. Henry book which will never be written. There were two house painters in New York, just commonplace fellows who butted around together and became acquainted. One day it happened to be just the other day—they slung their painter's scaffold on the front of a building, as they had done so often, and started methodically to cover the vertical surface.

Suddenly there was an ominous crack and the swinging platform gave way. One of the buddies fell instantly and was killed on the pavement below. The other, a little nearer one of the side ropes, made a wild grab and frantically seized the rope in his left hand. But before he had seized a 60-pound bucket of paint in his right hand.

For more than 5 agonizing seconds he hung there, the rope burning, blistering and then cutting through the flesh of his palm. But he never lost his grip on the bucket. Then somebody reached out from a window on the floor below, got his feet and swung him inward. Yes, he had the bucket with him. When asked why he hadn't let go of it, he said, "Well, that bucket's right heavy. If it had hit anybody down there on the street it wouldn't have done 'em any good. . . . How long was I hanging out there, anyway? Seemed like about 50 years."

As soon as his hand heals he'll be back on another scaffold. No use giving his name. It's a fairly safe bet that he won't be remembered for the Carnegie Hero Medal.

O. HENRY might have smiled and whittled a pencil over this one, too. From the left de France on her last trip to West street on the Hudson there stepped a very lovely lady. She remained four days in Bagdad-on-the-Subway and departed for Paris on the same boat which had brought her here. What do you suppose she came for? It was some thrilling mission, no doubt, involving millions or not less, certainly, than the life of a relative. Well, not precisely. She came to buy stockings—"dozens and dozens of your lovely stockings."

The lady was Mrs. Frank J. Gould and now, of course, we just know she wears 'em. But it was quite a little shopping tour, at that. New York must be what is known as a mart.

OF THE making of gadgets there is no end. If you can invent a collar button that holds up your trousers, a pair of spectacles with a detachable eye-cup or a practical fur-lined hot-water bottle, you may become a millionaire. If you invent a zipper, a better paper-clip or a self-lighting cigarette you really do become a millionaire, provided you combine business sense with your ingenuity. The latest gadget to knock New York off its axis combines a commercial with a moral purpose. It is aimed to end bootlegging, or, at least, to put a serious crimp in that nefarious trade.

The new gadget consists of a whiskey bottle with a genuine dime or quarter embedded in the glass in such a way that it can only be obtained by demolishing the bottle. The 10 or 20 cents is considered a deposit by the purchaser which can be retrieved after the liquor is consumed.

The greatest grief of legitimate liquor wholesalers, next to not selling their wares, is having bootleggers buy up their old bottles and counterfeit their labels. It is anticipated that they will not counterfeited Mr. Morgenthau's money. The new bottles, with new labels printed from new dies, which cost $20,000 each, will appear on the market in a few weeks. The bootlegger may find himself bottled up. Or maybe not.

IT is estimated that 60 per cent of the liquor now sold over metropolitan bars is either a bootleg product or substituted. This seems like a huge estimate, but how else can one explain the regular procession of giant stills, which the police keep revealing in out-of-the-way loft buildings?

One was raided only a few days ago, and so elaborate was the equipment that it could not have cost less than $50,000. But this capacity was such that it would have paid for itself in two weeks of operation. Obviously the illicit manufacturer could not afford to sink such an investment in so hazardous a venture unless he was sitting pretty in his own market. High taxes and an indiscriminating thirst help him considerably.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Is Russia Softening Up?

Soviet Russia is encouraging the masses to go in for more personal pulchritude and better manners. It is encouraging white collars, morning shaves, regular bathing and etiquette.

The Red Revolution may prove to have led from the Czars and the Cossacks to the Emily Posts and the beauty parlors.

And Lenin's ultimate place in history may be the man who aroused Russia to the importance of a clean shave, pink bathbaths and the noiseless soup spoon.

Neatness is being emphasized in Russian business. Any day now there may be Russian workmen in the collar advertisements.

Former downtrodden peasants may yet find happiness and an income in the underwear and garter ads.

The Bear That Walks Like a Man will presently Dress Like a College Boy, Eat Like a Gentleman and Wash Like a Bathing Beauty.

The Book of Etiquette is already reported a best seller and it is said the question uppermost in Russian minds has changed from, "How shall we revolutionize the world?" to "Should we invite him into the house?"

The man who used to yell, "Shall capitalism be tolerated?" is now crying, "Are spats proper with evening clothes?" And the girl who was always worrying whether civilization could be saved is now fretting over the beauty cream problem.

It would surprise nobody if Stalin indulged a cigarette for "lifting" Russia out of the pit, and let his picture appear on the billboards in a union suit.

How the Soviet New Deal will work out is a matter for speculation. As soon as the Russian masses realize they are looking, talking and behaving just like the upper class used to, there may be a demand for another revolution.

If the Soviet leaders are smart they will not over-emphasize the importance of razor blades, tile bathbaths and fingerbells in the life of a free people.

The Czar may have been cruel but he knew there was a limit.

No Luck.
Jim Farley has ruled that Admiral Byrd and his men can not vote by radio. This is very disheartening to radio fans, all of whom are looking for something new on the air.

The admiral and his boys at Little America, voting with appropriate musical accompaniment and with a solo or two by Kate Smith, would have been one of the high spots of the election.

On-n-n... the Fly-ing Tra-peze

Frozen horror hushed a wildly applauding New York theater audience a few days ago as a young high-wire artist plummeted 40 feet to the stage to die at the feet of her husband-partner.

Tragedy has claimed the lives of many aerialists. Some of them have lost wives, husbands, close friends. They know that falls are inevitable . . . but consider risk as part of the game. In this Sunday's Post Osgood Nichols tells a thrilling story of these daring men and women who make their living on high wires and swinging trapezes . . . with death close at their heels. The Judicial Mind.

NOW when the woman from California, visiting this summer in the Shakespeare country, interrupted the guide's lecture about the romance of Amy Robsart, Queen Elizabeth and the Earl of Leicester to demand of me whether it was true that all of the New Dealers were in love with their secretaries. Why should we be interested in the medieval romances when modern romance is running so high?

"Well, I don't like to steal your show," I said patronizingly. I am right capable of being witty when I want to.

"I do not think the situation—the New Dealer being in love with their secretaries—obtains so much today. It was, generally speaking, quite pronounced a few months ago when the revolution was at its height."

"And it was a very natural thing. Ordinary men do not make revolutions. Revolutionists are men burning up inside. They are emotionally afire. Now, the hordes who marched on us in Washington after March 4, 1933, were thus inflamed. They were on nerves' edge, they were fit to be killed. Something had happened to them which they could not explain and which they didn't attempt to explain. All they knew was they had a feeling they had not experienced in years."

"What it was, of course, was they had gotten jobs. After being out of office for so long, it was not strange that they should mistake the phenomenon of getting a job for a revolution."

"A great reform had come to them, the reform of being transferred from the ranks of the unemployed to the Government job-holding class. Therefore, to them the whole country seemed in the process of reform and here they were the reformers."

"A man in such a mental attitude as this is inclined unwittingly to seek to dramatize himself. It was a very human thing, therefore, for him to lean wearily over his desk until he appeared to be thoroughly worn out, or to exaggerate his burdens in the company of his secretary."

"It was inevitable that the air of drama would engulf the secretaries, that they would come to feel themselves a part of some great moving force, and want to share more and more in the great undertaking that was afoot."

"The wife, on the other hand, could see nothing dramatic about it at all. To her it was simply a case of her husband, long out of work, finally getting a job."

"Is it any wonder, then, that there should develop a bond between the man and his secretary as together they pursued in their fancy their great history-making?"

"But it is all over now," I concluded. "They have about settled down in Washington and gone to work."

And yet there are those who say I am critical. The truth is, that I have a judicial mind.

Parents in Tampico Receive Ultimatum

Tampico, Mexico, Oct. 24 (AP).—Two ultimatums were issued today by the governor to government employees and parents.

Employees who do not define their socialist attitude in five days will be discharged immediately. Parents opposed to their children's return to school before October 28 will lose the right to free education for the children.

I liked this best. There's a 2-page genealogical diagram entitled "The Royal Family"—nine married couples of 200-300 years back are ranged along the top; below them spread their descendants, interlocking at some point. And thus we find that the President is somehow or other related to Theodore Roosevelt, Martin Van Buren, John Quincy Adams, Ulysses S. Grant, Zachary Taylor, Jefferson Davis, James Madison, Robert E. Lee, William Henry Harrison, Benjamin Harrison and William H. Taft—all of whom claim one of those nine couples among their ancestors. So does George Washington. Genealogy is a fearful and wonderful thing.

Then there are editorials written by Mr. Roosevelt when he was president of the Harvard Crimson; 2 pages of his wedding notices; the votes at every one of his elections; newspaper front pages marking his rise to fame; 2 pages of "harsh and bitter words, most of which have been eaten"; 4 pages of White House memoranda (writes Mr. Moley: "Pres.—Get Lindsay agree to a brief long statement & to the principle," &c., or so it looks to me), and a bibliography of books by and about the Roosevelts.

Organized and headed the National Credit Bureau, served with the War Trade Intelligence and the War Industries Board. Is president of Dun & Bradstreet. Delegated to preside at hearings on price increases, it was charged he suppressed the Consumers' Advisory Board when it sought to present evidence of alleged abuses under NRA codes. Withdrew, but returned last month. Popular among business men. Small, gray-haired, friendly, able. Contributes to administering of NRA under its new board.

No End of Books

Don Wharton Puts Together a Lively Scrapbook of the President—"The Roosevelt Omnibus."

By Theodore Hall.

DOES anyone keep personal scrapbooks these days? Be- common as program dances—fat, bulging ledgers in which you pasted your first photograph to appear in the papers, your commencement invitation, your great-aunt's sketch of the family coat of arms, your wedding notice and an autograph from William Jennings Bryan.

But if the President hasn't kept one himself, Don Wharton has done just this for him in the omnivorous and cheerfully miscellaneous pages of "The Roosevelt Omnibus" (Knopf, $3.50). All it lacks is an old dance card and a pressed rose.

Few will gainsay Mr. Wharton's credo that anything Rooseveltian is, ipso facto, interesting. Here is F. D. R. in a panorama which unfolds from the book, in 35 yearly photographs out of his 32. Here are 4 pages of photographs taken off guard, 4 pages of him giving the glad hand, 2 pages eating, and 2 amazing pages (17 poses) of the President's expressions while speaking—some of which are so funny that they're unkind. Beyond all this there are photographs of everything from Mr. Roosevelt's baseball team at Groton to portraits of all the houses he's lived in.

For text Mr. Wharton has chosen 10 magazine articles—Henry F. Pringle in the New Yorker this summer, Morris Markay in McCall's, and the President's own account of the Cermak assassination, for examples. They record everything from his menus to his income. Then comes a section of caricatures and cartoons by no means always laudatory, and finally the miscellany.

Mr. Underhill's Progress (Reynold & Hitchcock, $2), by Elizabeth Corbett, seems nothing less than our Prof. Pitkin's "Life Begins at 40" dressed up with characters and plot. Mr. Underhill had lived in a quiet rural until he was gray-headed, though prematurely. Then he kicked over the traces. Miss Corbett repeats the good-cheer-for-the-aging pattern of "The Young Mrs. Meigs," with very pleasing wit and shrewdness.

Out of the very simplest of situations, Arthur Calder-Marshall builds a sharp, dramatic, and humanly revealing story which is scarcely short of superb. "A Sea" (Scrivener, $2) tells of a young couple, their honeymoon but one day old, who drift out in a helpless rowboat from a British seashore town, and spend one amiable, then fearful, then frantically desperate and hateful night at sea. In the old phrase, John and Elsa "run the gamut." Nothing could set off the skill of an author more sharply, and I can't name three who would have done it better.

Mr. Calder-Marshall is only 26, already acclaimed for his first novel, "About Love." No young English writer deserves more expectation, and so far rewarded, watching on our part.

Blaine Of Maine

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

LEAVING out the living, there have been in our political history four Americans who by their personality, attracted an enormous following. These were Henry Clay, James G. Blaine, William J. Bryan, and Theodore Roosevelt. I mean by this that during their lifetime they exerted an almost hypnotic influence on millions of their fellow-countrymen, who were absolutely devoted to them. My father voted for Henry Clay in 1844; and he told me of the heart-rending grief of innumerable individuals when Clay was defeated by Folk. The same shattering sorrow attended the defeat of Blaine; and perhaps no one has better expressed the insurgent agony of the followers of Bryan in November, 1896, so well as the late Vachel Lindsay in his poem "Bryan." The passionate devotion aroused by Theodore Roosevelt is a matter of very recent history.

In 1884 I saw Blaine and heard him speak on the day following the Rev. Dr. Burdick's fatal remark in New York. With his political sagacity, he recognized the probable consequences, and looked "out on his feet." A man who knew him in his early prime said that once when Blaine was called into the lobby to meet a delegation of his constituents from Maine, he came out smiling and apparently without a care in the world, although the House at that moment was in a whirlwind of tempestuous debate. A gentleman said: "Mr. Blaine, here are some men from your State who would like to pay their respects to you."

Blaine had never seen a single one of them before, but after being introduced, and talking agreeably with them for some 10 minutes, he said that he must return to his duties, and then, shaking hands cordially with each one in turn, he called every one of them by name!

Blaine's speech at the memorial exercises in honor of President Garfield was an example of magnificent oratory; and immediately became a favorite at school declamation exercises. His book, the title of which is "Twenty Years of Congress" and not "Twenty Years in Congress" as it is almost always misquoted, is of great value.

There was an audacious, dashing quality about Blaine, all the more remarkable because he was without the glamour of military service; he could not, like most politicians of his time, point with pride to any Army or Navy record. When Robert G. Ingersoll, a marvelous spell-binder, in his nominating speech at the Republican National Convention in 1876, called Blaine "The Plumed Knight," the name caught the imagination of the public and was never forgotten.

When Blaine was first elected by the Maine Legislature for about full six years term as U. S. Senator, he was elected unanimously.

"The Roosevelt Omnibus" strikes me as a lively journalistic, magpie collection of Presidential marginalia, edited amusingly and without any painfully marked bias. You'll be well entertained for an hour.

Jeeves, the irrepressible, invincible, and circumbendibusly stulticatory valet (ah, words!), is with us again in the pages of "Brinkley Manor" (Little-Brown, $2), P. G. Wodehouse's twenty-seventh book. It's mostly about the love-life of that sterling authority on guppies, Gussie Fink-Nottle—or "Spink-Bottle," as Bertie's aunt says. Very, very prime going.

John Erskine thinks that the libretto of an opera is not complete without the music to interpret it, and that the words should be sufficiently understandable by the audience to need no clarifying. So, with gay reverse English on both points, he issues the libretto of "Helen Retires" (Bobbs-Merrill, $1.50). With music by George Antheil, it was produced last February. Helen goes to the Isles of the Blest, is happy with Achilles, and finds that other men still pursue her. I agree with Mr. Erskine's first point.

In "Drury Randall" (Little-Brown, $2.50), Miss Mary Johnston tells the story of a young Southern idealist and philosopher who lived through the Civil War. In 1900 she wrote "To Have and to Hold," her second novel and the first best-seller of the century. She has been gaining in insight and stature ever since.

Mr. Underhill's Progress (Reynold & Hitchcock, $2), by Elizabeth Corbett, seems nothing less than our Prof. Pitkin's "Life Begins at 40" dressed up with characters and plot. Mr. Underhill had lived in a quiet rural until he was gray-headed, though prematurely. Then he kicked over the traces. Miss Corbett repeats the good-cheer-for-the-aging pattern of "The Young Mrs. Meigs," with very pleasing wit and shrewdness.

Out of the very simplest of situations, Arthur Calder-Marshall builds a sharp, dramatic, and humanly revealing story which is scarcely short of superb. "A Sea" (Scrivener, $2) tells of a young couple, their honeymoon but one day old, who drift out in a helpless rowboat from a British seashore town, and spend one amiable, then fearful, then frantically desperate and hateful night at sea. In the old phrase, John and Elsa "run the gamut." Nothing could set off the skill of an author more sharply, and I can't name three who would have done it better.

Mr. Calder-Marshall is only 26, already acclaimed for his first novel, "About Love." No young English writer deserves more expectation, and so far rewarded, watching on our part.

Calling New Deal's Turn Is Word Puzzle

Confusions Arise From Labels and Terms Used to Describe Roosevelt's Course.

By Elliott Thurston.

SOME of the confusion surrounding the American scene results from the inadequacies of the English language and from the eternal difficulties in defining terms.

At the moment complications are arising from the tendency to describe Mr. Roosevelt's recent course as "conservative" or a "turn to the right." One of the complications is that, stated in these terms, Mr. Roosevelt is made to appear as if he were discarding one political philosophy for another. It suggests instability, vacillation, a breaking with one previously held viewpoint and adoption of another new one. It tends to alienate one set of political forces while momentarily encouraging another.

Similarly, the horizon is frequently more clouded than cleared by the prevalence of public discussion in terms of "radicalism," "liberalism," "socialism," or some other "ism" versus "conservatism," "Americanism," "the established order" or some other supposed synonym for long-established forms, habits or policies of government in contrast with innovations.

Inflation is much debated in Congress and out by those who fail to explain what they mean by the word. One group uses the word as if it denoted what the coiners of the word "reflation" are trying to say. They mean, roughly, that they wish the cycle of deflationary forces to be replaced by a cycle of better prices which will produce solvency and profits without impairing the Government's credit or currency.

ECONOMISTS and most others of course, mean by inflation the processes of credit and currency destruction familiar to ancient, as well as recent history. And "fair prices" and "fair wages" are likewise much used and abused, as if economic science dealing with the complex factors entering into prices and wages could be concerned with ethical questions.

To those who try to see Government policy or procedure as realistically as is humanly possible, the important thing is not whether a given policy is labeled "collectivist," "communist," or what not, but whether it is sound, workable and productive of "the greatest good for the greatest number." The habit of debating in terms of labels rather than in terms of practicality serves to intensify existing confusions.

By the same token, much current discussion to the effect that reform should give way to recovery suggests ly, every Republican and every Democrat voting for him. James Gillespie Blaine was born at West Brownsville, Pa., January 31, 1830, was graduated from Washington College, Pa., moved to Augusta, Me., in 1854, and died in Washington, January 27, 1903.

(Copyright, 1934.)

gests that the two are mutually exclusive when, rationally, it would seem, there can be no real incompatibility between them. Presumably, everybody is for recovery, and for whatever reforms will promote and perpetuate it. What would prevent or jeopardize what everybody wants hardly deserves the name of reform.

But random forays into logic are irrelevant. The pertinent fact is that Presidents are moved by the printed and the spoken word. And when Mr. Roosevelt is represented as turning to the right, or going conservative, he is made to look as if he had broken with convictions or with political forces, over which he wants to retain command, and rushed into the embraces of bankers or other alleged right-wingers, whose company, unhappily, remains politically—well, undesirable.

THE TRUTH is that Mr. Roosevelt has not turned to the right or to the left. He is still playing quarterback. He is still experimentally using plays, whatever the labels, that he hopes will gain ground. He has not changed, or compromised with his convictions any more than have the bankers who hold out olive branches. Presumably, he is ready to take good advice from whatever source it comes—even from bankers. He is understandably irked, by words which imply that he is surrendering, or capitulating. Use of such words tends to confusions which intensify political complications. It might be argued that Mr. Roosevelt's philosophy is a mixture, or that he is undecidably irked. Whatever it may be, however liked or disliked, it is his own, an "not much light or guidance is afforded by merely trying to pin a label on it."

Nor is the President encouraged to listen to those who tell him he should turn "to the right" or to "conservatism"—that he should discard "radicalism" or "reform." Perhaps he should. But expediency, for instance, suggests that he be urged to do this or do that because it is the best thing to do from the standpoint of the National, the public interest—not because it is right-wing or left-wing and regardless of which wing suggested it, or is for or against it.

10 Years Given Wife; Beat 'Other Woman'

Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Frank W. Warren, 24, wife of a prominent Grand Rapids dentist, was convicted by a jury today of assault with intent to do great bodily harm, for allegedly beating her husband's office assistant, Miss Dorothy Morris, 19, with a hairpin.

Mrs. Warren, who had accused the girl of intimacy with her husband, was sentenced to three to ten years in the Detroit House of Correction. Defense counsel said an appeal would be taken. Miss Morris denied Mrs. Warren's charge.

Caravan Takes G. O. P. Cause To Frederick

France Asails 'Too Much Brains'; Nice Scores 'Ritchie Machine.'

Frederick, Md., Oct. 24 (P).—State, Congressional and local candidates, attached to the Republican automobile campaign caravan, beat the bushes of Frederick County today in an effort to arouse the enthusiasm of Republicans and enlist disaffected Democrats to their cause.

Harry W. Nice, candidate for Governor and chief figure in the parade, made a flying trip to Baltimore today to address a luncheon meeting, but he was back in the procession by the time it reached Brunswick.

While their leader was absent, Joseph I. France, candidate for the Senate, and Frederick N. Zihlman, candidate for Congress from the Sixth District, took the leading roles during the stops made at Middle-town, Myersville, Mount Pleasant, Libertytown, Johnsville, Woodboro, Creagerstown, Thurmont, Emmitsburg, Calocota Furnace, Lewis-town, Walkersville, Jefferson, Brunswick, Knoxville and Burkholder.

France, who was considered somewhat "leftish" when he was in the United States Senate, was on the conservative side, as compared with the present Democratic Administration, in his talks today. He urged a "return to the old principles of the Republic and of the Constitution," and denounced "too much brains" in Washington. The President's advisers, he said, were "educated away from the problems of the people."

Zihlman, opposing Representative David J. Lewis, the Democratic nominee, attacked his rival on the ground that western Maryland had not received its share of Federal benefits during the Lewis representation.

Nice, speaking here tonight, continued his attack on the "Ritchie machine," and gave special attention to his proposals for an investigation of the past bank failures and a new law to protect depositors in the future.

Ritchie Derides Nice's Stand on Auto Fees.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 24 (P).—Gov. Albert C. Ritchie, Democratic nominee for a fifth term in office, tonight told his audience at a Hagerstown mass meeting that he was promising to reduce automobile license fees to $2, his Republican opponent, Harry W. Nice, does not know what he is talking about.

If Nice is elected, and if he carries out his promise, the State would lose not only $2,000,000 in revenue, but also more than a half million dollars in Federal highway revenue, the Governor said.

Ritchie pointed out the law governing Federal appropriations to State road construction which requires each State to maintain the taxes for highway purposes it had when the law was passed, or give up one-third of its Federal appropriation.

"Is Mr. Nice familiar with this section of the Federal law?" Ritchie asked.

"In the next place, does Mr. Nice know that the license fees from commercial trucks can not be reduced, because the last Legislature pledged them to the Federal Government to secure $4,000,000 road debentures which the Federal Government bought?"

"And how does Mr. Nice propose to make up this sum? He is reported as saying that he would do this by elimination of waste and extravagance in the office of the commissioner of motor vehicles. Does he know what the total appropriation of the motor vehicle department amounts to? It is $300,701 for the current year. This is only one-fourth of the total loss of revenue."

"Does Mr. Nice propose to make up the loss by increasing the gasoline tax. The money has to be made up by a new tax on somebody, or else the roads will go to pieces. Which does Mr. Nice prefer?"

Virginian Reports He Spent 50 Cents In Congress Fight

A Morning-After Headache

Two Youths Accused at Laurel, Del., of Rampage That Left Ruin in Wake; They Blame "Evil Spirits" as Judge Holds Them for Trial.

Laurel, Del., Oct. 24 (Spl).—Frank Eskridge, 26, and William Wheatley, 21, whose homes are in Bethes, 4 miles from Laurel, were arrested by Officer Hickman early today, charged with indulging in a drunken rampage, in which they sought to destroy personal property, wreck buildings and tamper with U. S. mail boxes.

The young men were brought before Magistrate Thomas W. Records and were placed under $500 bail for appearance at the February term of superior court.

Shortly after midnight, Eskridge and Wheatley arrived in town intoxicated and started their tour of destruction, Hicks said, upsetting flower urns, uprooting shrubbery, smashing windows and accessories on automobiles, and then, as a grand finale, started to smash the U. S. mail box near the postoffice.

They had gone to a restaurant when the officer arrived, but offered no resistance when arrested.

Before Magistrate Records this afternoon the men said they were charged with an overdose of "evil spirits."

Contracts Authorize 12 Projects; Cut-Off on Eastern Route.

Richmond, Oct. 24 (P).—Twelve highway projects, involving expenditure of more than $3,250,000, were authorized by contracts awarded by the State highway department at a meeting here today.

The commission also heard delegations interested in alternate locations proposed for the Lee highway cut-off, between Timber Ridge and Lexington, and decided to adopt the eastern route.

Five of the highway contracts awarded were to low bidders whose offers were received on October 16, and the other seven were on projects for which bids were opened yesterday. Five of these were two low bidders, while in the case of the other two, the low bid was set aside and the second low bid accepted.

The October 16 bids accepted included: Route 15, Loudoun County, Little River Bridge and approaches 2.5 miles north of Aldie, to Blackwell Engineering & Construction Co., Warrenton, and Alley Construction Co., Bristol, Va., $22,021.10.

Slash Expected In Crude Price

One Executive Forecasts Break Today; Texas to Stem Flow.

Tulsa, Okla., Oct. 24 (P).—A definite break in midcontinent crude oil prices—the first in more than a year—was forecast by some midcontinent executives tonight.

"I have heard nothing to alter my conviction the price will be cut tomorrow," said one industrial leader, who declined to permit use of his name. His firm purchases hundreds of thousands of barrels monthly and operates on a nationwide scale.

Another said "I think tomorrow morning will be one of the busiest the boys have seen in a long time," referring to a prospective cut.

The Atlas Pipe Line Co., a comparatively small unit, remained the only one that has actually cut prices. This firm, buying 6,000 of the 500,000 barrels of oil produced daily in East Texas, reduced its posted price from $1 to 60 cents, effective yesterday.

A new gravity scale up to 65 or 70 cents may be general by tomorrow night if the forecasts of a dozen company heads and their aids are well founded. The price ranges now to $1.08 in Oklahoma and Kansas, to $1.03 in north-central Texas, Arkansas and north Louisiana, and to $1.14 on the Gulf coast.

Meanwhile, a Federal tender board swung into action to curb movement of illegally-produced Texas oil in interstate commerce, while the railroad commission of that State prepared an order calling for a shutdown of all producers. Only the effective date remained to be filled in.

Richetti Taken To "Unfit" Jail; Chief Menaced

Old Building at Lisbon, O., Twice Condemned, Is Heavily Guarded.

Lisbon, Ohio, Oct. 24 (P).—A 95-year-old county jail, twice condemned as unfit, tonight held Adam Richetti, desperado companion of the slain Charles "Pretty Boy" Floyd.

Richetti, wanted in Columbia, Mo., for slaying two officers, and accused in the Kansas City machine gun massacre of five men, is under a heavy guard against any attempt at an escape.

There are armed deputies inside and outside the ancient structure, and Sheriff Frank Ballantine said every precaution has been taken.

Police Chief J. H. Fultz, of Wellsville, received a death threat today, signed "The Gang."

The letter, mailed yesterday at East Liverpool, Ohio, said, "You got Floyd and Richetti, but we will get the one that got them."

Chief Comes Back.

Fultz, who arrested Richetti Saturday, but was not present Monday, when Federal and East Liverpool officers shot and killed Floyd, retorted:

"If the gang is as yilled as Floyd and Richetti, I wouldn't be afraid of a carload of them."

Although Richetti is held here on two Ohio charges, Prosecutor George Lafferty disclosed today he probably will be taken to Columbia to face charges of slaying Sgt. Ben Booth of the Missouri State Highway Patrol, and Sheriff Roger Wilson.

Extradition papers for Richetti's return to Columbia were prepared today and will be submitted tomorrow to Gov. Guy B. Park for signature.

A six-car procession of officers, armed to the teeth, brought Richetti to the county jail from Wellsville today. Two were handcuffed to the prisoner.

Children See Prisoner.

Hundreds of farmers stood outside their dwellings to see the desperado pass on a lap of a journey that may lead to his death.

Even school children were given a lesson in Richetti's predicament when hundreds were taken to the jail to see the prisoner and be told that "crime doesn't pay."

Twice, chief Fultz led Richetti from the county jail so the children could see him, still handcuffed to two officers.

Richetti never spoke a word, but wept when one of the officers told him the body of Floyd was started from East Liverpool today to Sallisaw, Okla., for burial. It will arrive there by train early Saturday, and will be buried beside the bodies of his father and an infant brother.

Hyattsville Jails Four In Default of Fines

Three men and one woman were committed to jail in default of fines yesterday in the Hyattsville Police Court.

Frank J. Beard, of Baltimore, was committed to the Marlboro Jail for three days, when he failed to produce $25 for speeding. He was arrested by State Police Corp. C. W. Cabbage, at Berwyn, Md.

John Hill, Maggie Davis and David Ingraham, of Hyattsville, were given five days in jail, when they admitted they could not pay $5 each for disturbing the peace of Hyattsville last Saturday. They were arrested by Prince Georges County Policeman Claude Reese.

Silk Dyers Go On Strike as Parley Fails

30,000 on Picket Line Today in Jersey; Employers to Open Mills.

Paterson, N. J., Oct. 24 (P).—Last minute efforts to avert the pending silk dyers' strike ended in failure tonight when a conference of employers and workers broke up four minutes after it began.

"The strike is on at midnight," said George Baldanzi, president of the Federation of Silk and Rayon Dyers and Finishers of America.

Baldanzi said 30,000 dyers, 25,000 in the Passaic Valley and 5,000 more in the metropolitan area, would be on the picket lines at the mills in the morning.

Mills Open Today.

Emanuel Shavick, of the Institute of Silk Dyers and Finishers, employers' group, countered with the assertion that the mills will open as usual tomorrow morning "to admit all loyal workers," who will have, he said, "police protection."

Though still holding firmly against the "closed shop," the employers offered concessions to two of the strikers' demands. They agreed to extend six months the employer-employee agreement which expires today and to refer all disputed issues to the National Textile Labor Board for arbitration.

President Roosevelt's plea for industrial truce, the employers said, prompted these concessions.

Baldanzi said the strike will continue until the workers' demand for a $20 weekly minimum wage is met.

The present working contract provides a basic rate of 57½ cents an hour for a 40-hour week, or $23

Streamlined Train Speeds East to Record

Oil-Driven Flier Reaches Chicago From Coast in 38 Hours.

Elkhart, Ind., Oct. 24 (P).—The Union Pacific's stream-line train, headed for New York on its dash from Los Angeles, passed through here at 5:17 p. m., central standard time. The train was two minutes ahead of the regular schedule of the Twentieth Century Limited, which follows the same route.

Chicago, Oct. 24 (P).—A snub-nosed bullet—the Union Pacific's record-breaking stream-lined train—shot out of Chicago late today toward the next stop on its transcontinental dash to New York.

Defying superstition, the sleek six-car oil-driven flier, looking like a huge caterpillar, slipped into the LaSalle Street Station in downtown Chicago at 2:54 p. m., central standard time, and came to a halt on track 13. It was ahead of its schedule. Promptly at 3:30 p. m., the new speed king headed East.

Other records claimed by the new mistress of the rails on the race to Chicago were:

Two miles between Dix and Potter, Neb., in one minute flat.

Eighteen and one-tenth miles between Kimball, Wyo., and Sidney, Neb., in 10 minutes, averaging 109 miles per hour.

Five hundred and eight miles from Cheyenne, Wyo., to Omaha, Neb., with a sustained speed of 84 miles per hour.

The fastest record of a steam train is 113.2 miles per hour, made in 1904 by the Philadelphia and Reading Road for 4.8 miles.

Annapolis, Oct. 24 (P).—Anne Arundel County authorities today were asked to search for Dr. H. R. Weakley, 49-year-old veterinarian, who has been missing from his home on the Defense highway, near here, since Monday noon.

Mrs. Weakley told Sheriff R. Glenn Prout that her husband was last seen on the Benfield road, near Indian Landing, headed toward the Crain highway. He was driving a blue coupe.

Dr. Weakley is 5 feet 5 inches tall and has brown hair and eyes. He was wearing a brown suit and a brown soft hat.

ment were returned before Justice Oscar R. Lühring, shortly after 11 o'clock, and at 1:30 Landreau, accompanied by Richard Wellford, a friend, went before Justice Lühring and admitted his guilt. He had previously explained he wished to "take his medicine and get it over with."

Justice Lühring sentenced Landreau to serve from two to four years on each of the eight counts, but in permitting the sentence to run concurrently he made it possible for Landreau to be released in two years.

Speculated, He Says.

Justice Lühring said before imposing sentence that the embezzlements were made by a lawyer who had an excellent knowledge of the law, and that they "were without justification of excuse."

"Why did you take this money?" he demanded.

Without rising from his seat, Landreau replied, "Speculation." Deputy marshals immediately placed Landreau in a private car and took him to the District Jail to begin serving his sentence.

Landreau is married and has two children. Disbarment is automatic in the case of an attorney who is convicted of a felony.

General Roundup Is Ordered For Underworld Characters

to aid in the investigation at Takoma Park after an official request for help from State's Attorney Stedman Prescott, of Rockville. Brown said members of the homicide squad would cooperate with Maryland authorities.

Locally, detectives also have been assigned to go into all the angles of the case. Underworld and gambling haunts are being searched for possible suspects.

Commissioner Hazen's announcement followed his conference with Maj. Brown yesterday morning.

"We are going to keep following gamblers and suspicious characters around and hounding them until they get out of the city," Commissioner Hazen said.

"The police are going to pick them up every time they see one of them. They are going to book them for investigation and hold them on that as long as they can. If they can't find convicting evidence against them, they will release them, but they are going to pick them up and do the same thing over and over again until they get out of here."

Conference on Laws.

The legislative program is to be worked out at a conference to be held later, Commissioner Hazen said. It will be called by the Commissioners. They will invite Judge Gus Schuldt, presiding judge of the Police Court; United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett, Corporation Counsel E. Barrett Prettyman and Maj. Brown.

The conference probably will be delayed until after hearings on the annual District budget, which begin Monday and are expected to last ten days.

Meanwhile, Commissioner Hazen asserted, each person who will attend the conference will work out his own ideas about legislation to be sought.

Pleas for some additional legislation were contained in the annual report of Maj. Brown. These requests have been referred to Corporation Counsel Prettyman.

Numbers Game Target.

The main anti-gambling provision asked was aimed at the numbers racket. Following his conference with Commissioner Hazen yesterday, Maj. Brown elaborated on his anti-gambling proposal.

Maj. Brown would make it a violation of the gambling law for anyone to have in his possession any gambling paraphernalia, betting slips, numbers tabs, betting memoranda or other material. He would permit the arrest of persons on the street on suspicion when they possessed such things.

"This is aimed at the widespread conduct of the numbers game through runners employed by operators," Maj. Brown explained.

These runners are paid 15 percent of collections from the sale of tickets, Maj. Brown said. They usually have regular beats—regular customers. They deliver the prizes to their customers. Often the better never sees the operator.

with whom he places his money, or knows for certain his identity.

Alias for Operators.

Usually he is known by an alias, such as "Harry" or "Steve," or "Charlie," as bootleggers were in the pre-prohibition era.

Commissioner Hazen and Maj. Brown complained that the police force was inadequate. Both said requests for additional personnel had been refused by the Budget Bureau and by Congress.

Commissioners have asked for an additional 35 policemen for the coming year. This is the number which Congress cut from the force two years ago.

"Meanwhile," asserted Commissioner Hazen, "the police are going to do all in their power. I told Maj. Brown to offer every cooperation to the Maryland authorities, where this latest shooting occurred."

Possibly the Commissioners may offer a reward for the killers, Maj. Brown suggested $300. Decision was reserved until Maryland authorities have been consulted.

The complaint filed with the civil committee of the Washington Federation of Churches was handed to the police chief by Mr. Hazen.

Maj. Brown is to report on each complaint and make whatever recommendation he sees fit.

Crime Wave Depreciated.

Talk of a "crime wave" was depreciated both by the Commissioners and the police chief.

They stated they doubted there was a "gang warfare." The shootings, they said, were the result of bad feeling among some of those linked up with gambling in the District.

"The police record isn't so bad," said Commissioner Hazen.

He cited figures in the annual report of the chief.

Felonies in the previous fiscal year numbered 9,431, as compared with 8,875 the last fiscal year, the report revealed. The department reported 729 solved.

Figures on arrests in the last fiscal year were set forth as: Grand larceny, 1,303; housebreaking, 2,674; attempted robbery, 92; manslaughter, 36; and murder, 81.

Pawnshop Reveals Theft of Jewelry

Capital Police Aid in Case at Gambrills, Md.

Annapolis, Oct. 24 (Sp.).—Annapolis and Washington police are cooperating in trying to solve a robbery at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. A. King, at Gambrills, discovered as the result of articles pawned in Washington.

The jewelry squad of the Washington police reported to local police that a diamond ring, watch and silverware, thought to be stolen property, had been found in a pawnshop. They said the articles were pawned by a woman who gave the name of "B. A. King."

Local police communicated with Mrs. King, who found that silverware and jewelry she had placed in a suitcase had been stolen. She said she thought she had mislaid the suitcase. With her husband she will go to Washington in the next few days to identify the articles.

Loughran Asks Zoning Change At Alexandria

Plans to Spend $50,000 Remodeling Building Into Apartment.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The city council last night considered the request of John Loughran, of Washington, through his counsel, Frederick G. Davis, to restore the old Express Spark Plug property, on North Washington street, from commercial to residential "D," to enable the remodeling of the building into an apartment house.

Mr. Loughran stated he would expend between $50,000 and $70,000 on the remodeling; that his present plans provide for 29 apartments of 1, 2 and 3 rooms, and exhibited an architectural sketch showing the building with the addition of a Colonial porch.

The clerk read a communication from the National Park and Planning Commission, asking that plans and specifications be submitted for approval, since the building is located on the Mount Vernon Memorial highway, and the agreement of the Government with the City of Alexandria restricts the type of buildings and their use. Attorney Albert V. Bryan, representing abutting property owners, protested against the proposed rezoning without plans and specifications.

The council finally decided to hold a special meeting on November 7, at which Mr. Loughran would be requested to present his plans, and the National Park and Planning Commission invited to have a representative present.

The property in question had a frontage on Washington street of 294 feet. It is reputed to be more than 100 years old; was used before the Civil War as a cotton factory, and more recently as a bottling works for the Porter Brewery. For a number of years it has been used as a factory for the manufacture of automobile spark plugs.

Eight Are Indicted In Plot to Free Nash

Kansas City, Oct. 24 (AP).—Louis Stacci, of Melrose Park, Ill., who allegedly ordered the attempt to rescue Frank Nash, a gangster, which ended in five slayings at the Union Station here June 17, 1933, was indicted with seven other persons today for conspiracy.

The plot, reportedly carried out by two gangsters since slain, Vernon C. Miller and Charles (Pretty Boy) Floyd, and a third man, Adam Richetti, now under arrest, has been studied since Monday by a Federal grand jury. The indictment accused the eight persons of participating in telephone calls which figured in the plot to free Nash after his capture at Hot Springs, Ark.

Derrick Given Milk Unit Post

Named to Succeed McGill as Manager of Virginia, Maryland Group.

Bruce B. Derrick, an official of the dairy division of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, has been elected manager of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers' Association, it was learned today.

Mr. Derrick, whose home is at 1331 Locust road northwest, will succeed John McGill, Jr., as manager, the latter having resigned last March following the Senate committee's investigation into the Washington milk situation.

The new manager will take command November 1 and is resigning his post as market administrator for the Baltimore milk market in the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, he said last night.

Mr. McGill and L. W. Heaps, another official of the organization, were charged with using "czarist" tactics and with failing to properly represent the producers in the course of the Senate investigation.

Mr. Derrick resigned under fire after having been reappointed to his post on a temporary basis. Insurgent members of the association demanded his removal and he tendered his resignation to Frank S. Walker, of Orange, Va., president of the group, last February 10, to become effective March 15.

Laurel Holds Pair On Rum Charge

Sale of Whisky Without a License Is Alleged.

Charles Starr, said to be proprietor of a restaurant at Laurel, Md., and Spiro Pataros, reputedly a member of the Baltimore Police, were charged today by Chief of Police Earl Huber of Laurel and Special Officer B. G. Timanus.

Justice of the Peace J. W. Wachter held Starr under $500 bond for the grand jury on a charge of selling whisky, beer and cigarettes without a license. Patros was held under $100 bond as a material witness.

Chief Huber also arrested Stanley and Hazell Bures, alleged racketeers, on a charge of selling liquor, beer and cigarettes without a license. The two men were accused of resisting arrest and assaulting an officer after they had struggled with Chief Huber. Justice of the Peace James S. Yawter ordered them jailed in default of bond.

Marine Brigade May Be Split Up

Reserve Units May Undergo Reorganization Into Two Battalions.

The possibility of a revamped plan of military organization for the local units of the Marine Corps Reserve loomed yesterday when it was learned that Marine Headquarters has completed a study of the local set-up.

At the present time the Washington units are organized into a theoretical brigade. This plan calls for filling in the vacancies in case of emergency.

However, at present the units are not built up to peace-time strength and officers are considering the possibility of setting up two battalions instead of the present brigade plan. The change would not affect the personnel of the local units materially. In case of a number of enlistments being received the brigade organization could be adopted. It is understood that if the two battalion organization is put into effect that Maj. Harvey Miller and Maj. Lucian Vandoren will command the two military units. Both Miller and Vandoren are members of the District Boxing Commission in addition to being prominent in Marine affairs.

Prince Georges Set for Rally Of Democrats

Thousands to Take Part in Torchlight Parade Tomorrow.

Plans for tomorrow's Democratic torchlight parade and rally in Prince Georges County were completed last night by the Young Men's Democratic Club of the county.

At a meeting held at Hyattsville it was announced that thousands will participate in the demonstration, which will climax the county Democratic campaign.

Justice of the Peace William McD. Lindsey, president of the Lanham District Democratic Club, has been selected as grand marshal of the parade. The parade program finally agreed on is as follows:

The northern motorcade will leave Laurel, Md., at 6:30 p. m., meeting the Vansville Democratic Club at Beltsville at 6:45 p. m. The Berwyn Democratic Club will be annexed at the intersection of the Washington-Baltimore boulevard and the Branchville road.

The southern motorcade will proceed down the Branchville road to the Edmonston road, thence to the Crain highway. Here it will meet the southern motorcade which will be formed at Upper Marlboro at the close of the rally at which Gov. Ritchie and other candidates of the Maryland State ticket are to speak.

Leaving Upper Marlboro at 6:15 p. m., this line will move up the Crain highway, and at 6:30 p. m. it will be joined at the intersection of the Defense highway by the Lanham District Democratic Club.

At 7 p. m., the southern motorcade will meet the Young Democrats of southern Maryland at the Defense highway and Landover road intersection. The Young Men's Democratic Club of Seat Pleasant will also join here.

The northern and southern contingents will converge at the Defense highway and Edmonston road, Bladensburg. A short distance away, at River road, they will meet the Bladensburg District Men's and Women's Clubs.

Continuing by the Bladensburg Memorial Club, several bands, the torchlight parade will move through Colmar Manor and Cottage City to Mount Rainier.

Meet Other Groups. Here they will be met by the Chillum Men's and Women's Clubs and the Brentwood Democratic Club. The parade will then be led down Rhode Island avenue to Hyattsville.

At Columbia avenue, Hyattsville, the local Women's Democratic Club will join the procession. At Park avenue the Hyattsville men and the Edmonston Club will fall in line. The Riverdale Club will be annexed at Madison avenue and the Baltimore boulevard, Riverdale.

The parade will be concluded at Ritchie Coliseum, University of Maryland, where Gov. Ritchie and the other State candidates will speak. The meeting will be presided over by T. Howard Duckett, of Hyattsville.

Police Drag Bay For Man's Body

Find His Coat, With Farewell Notes, on Dock.

A man's single-breasted coat, containing several farewell notes, found on the Locust Point Ferry dock in Baltimore, Md., at dusk yesterday led Baltimore police to drag the Chesapeake Bay for the body of a man believed to be named H. Van Robinson, supposedly of Washington.

The notes were addressed to "Doris," and to Mr. and Mrs. H. V. Robinson, of Muskegon, Mich. The latter note began, "Dear Mother and Dad,"

The dragging of the bay continued for several hours. Washington addresses on letters in the coat's pockets were checked and found fallacious.

Sunrise in the Suburbs

By Clyde H. DuBois.

The scabbard and blade (National Military fraternity) chapters of two schools—the University of Maryland and Johns Hopkins University—will figuratively lay down their arms tomorrow for a few minutes.

Following a custom of years past they will "lay down arms" long enough to "shoulder arms" at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington Cemetery, where they will pay tribute to the American dead.

Capt. Thaddeus R. Dulin, president of the Maryland group, will place the wreath and preside at the dedication of a war memorial plaque in the amphitheater.

Just prior to the Revolutionary War, and in the earlier stages of that affair, Maryland maintained several county militia companies known as "Independents."

They were reported to be gaudily uniformed outfits and to have made quite an impression on Maryland's sister (or brother) States.

This "Independent" spirit seems to be predominant in Montgomery County politics even in this day. In fact, there has been so much "Independent" spirit out there it has now become difficult to ascertain who are the independents and who are the "old timers."

County Board's Plan Indorsed In Lyon Park

ANLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, Clarendon, Va.

Resolutions favoring in principle legislation which would permit the Arlington County board to appoint its own legal adviser were adopted by the Lyon Park Citizens Association last night.

At present the Commonwealth's attorney acts in the capacity of legal adviser to the county board, and the proposed legislation would take from him that power.

Delegates to the Arlington County Civic Federation were instructed to work in behalf of a similar resolution which is now before the board. The matter will be taken up at the November meeting.

C. P. Dyer was elected member of the executive committee, filling the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. N. B. Medley.

Ballston Meeting Called. Plans are being made by the Ballston Citizens' Association to hold a mass meeting next Tuesday night in the Firemen's Hall to discuss proposals for the elimination of the digging up of streets by property owners to make sewer connections.

The meeting will be addressed by plumbing engineers and others interested in the movement and will be attended by citizens of Ballston and representatives from all sections of the county.

It is pointed out that on some streets which are paved with concrete the sewers are being laid along the side of the pavement, but on most of the streets and roads the line is going down the center.

It is suggested by President Raymond Cogswell and other officials of the organization that the taps on the new sewer lines be carried to property lines on either side of the roadway especially in the more thickly populated sections of the county.

The State highway department will be requested to straighten out the narrow curve in Garrison road leading to the Washington-Lee High School before the section becomes built up.

Club Is Chartered. The Virginia State Corporation Commission has granted a charter to the Hanger Club, with principal offices at South Washington, Arlington County.

The officers are William Levy, president; Harold Levy, vice president; and Bernard Levy, secretary-treasurer.

The charter provides that the maximum capital stock shall be 100 shares and the minimum 10 shares, of no par value.

The Arlington Rotary Club luncheon meeting will be held today at 12:30 o'clock at the Washington Golf and Country Club.

There will be a meeting of the executive committee of the Old Dominion Bank of Cherrydale today at 5 p. m. in the bank building.

Nice Will Address Rally in Rockville. Harry W. Nice, Republican candidate for Governor of Maryland, with other State Republican candidates, will address a Republican rally tomorrow night at 8 p. m. in the Rockville (Md.) High School. This will be the only county-wide meeting to be staged by the Republicans.

The speakers will be Joseph I. France, candidate for United States Senator; Joseph I. France, candidate for attorney general of Maryland; F. Bernard Welsh, candidate for associate judge of the Sixth Judicial Circuit, comprising Montgomery and Frederick counties; and Frederick N. Zihlman, candidate for the House of Representatives.

Tighe, 76, Re-elected President of Union. Pittsburgh, Oct. 24 (AP).—The reelection of Michael F. Tighe, 76-year-old president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers, was announced tonight by the union's special canvassing board.

The five members of the board, at work on the tabulations since the election September 15, said Tighe was reelected, along with all the other old officers in a close race which was hailed as a victory for the conservatives.

Assessment Ordered For Anne Arundel. Annapolis, Md., Oct. 24 (Sp.).—The State tax commission, through Chairman Jesse D. Price, has called on the Anne Arundel County Commissioners to appropriate $24,500 for a new assessment of property, it was announced today by the commissioners.

Sixteen assessors, two from each district, are to be named. It is expected one year will be required to complete the work. The new assessment will furnish the basis for 1935 bills.

Willie, the Office Boy, has often asked us, "Why is a book critic?" We know the answer: a book critic is a person who, practically, is chained to a typewriter and who reads all the new books in order to save others time, expense and worry in choosing good, interesting books to buy, borrow, or send as a Christmas present to Aunt Minnie who lives in Peoria . . . but who, also, must write so interestingly that his column is excellent daily reading in itself.

Our Ted is something of an enigma among book critics. Long ago, he was forced to turn in his card to the Amalgamated Book Reviewers of America because he violated union rules by actually praising a new novel. You see, his column, "No End of Books," found each day in The Washington Post on the Page Opposite Editorials, really helps you in your literary wanderings, and is not used as a private sounding board for Theodore Hall. Then, too, he can't pick bones with every new book. He can never tell when some struggling author whom he has panned mercilessly will prove a second Cabell or Sinclair Lewis . . . or dope an EPIC program and run for Governor!

But his reports are accurate, clear, concise and complete. He knows his trade and his authors (the author of "Dodsworth" is just plain "Red" Lewis to him). His pronouncements are serious and studied, like those of the Delphian oracle, but they're far from Deadly Dull. You'll find him discussing with equal zest the latest economic scheme for dragging Prosperity from behind that corner, or the poems of Edna St. Vincent Millay, or P. G. Wodehouse's new "Jeeves" story. He writes well: not many persons know that he helped "ghost-write" a famous, best-selling American history.

"No End of Books," a friend once told us, must be written by a chap with no end of spare time for reading all those books. Well, Ted Hall's that sort of chap. Not long ago, after he had been unlocked from his typewriter and allowed an afternoon off, we discovered him browsing around in Brentano's basement.

He recognized us and blushed guiltily. "Oh," he admitted, "I just thought I'd like a good book to read tonight."

Capital Man's Canvas Wins $100 at Philadelphia.

Omer Raymond Carrington, University of Maryland extension service editor and well-known local artist, yesterday was awarded first prize of $100 for a painting exhibited at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts at Philadelphia.

The picture, entitled "Landscape," was one of 50 submitted in the fall contest. Carrington, a night student at the Corcoran Art School, lives at 2124 I street northwest.

He was graduated from the University of Maryland in the class of 1928, and is a member of the Washington Art Club and Landscape Club. He painted the prize-winning picture while he was a student at the Pennsylvania academy's summer school at Chester Springs, Pa.

Policy Juggled By Fusionists, Prescott Holds

Democratic Leader Cites Promise of School in Montgomery.

Fusion candidates in Montgomery County were accused of reversing their stand with regard to bond issues by Stedman Prescott, chairman of the Democratic organization committee and candidate for State senator, at a Democratic rally in Clarksburg, Md., last night.

Mr. Prescott's charge dealt directly with the promise of the Fusion faction to complete the West-Suburban High School in the event of their election. He declared that a bond issue would be required for this work unless taxes were to be doubled or trebled.

"The Fusionists completely reversed themselves on one plank in their platform the first time a question was definitely presented to them by the people," he said.

"When asked for a definite commitment by the Parent-Teacher Association of Bethesda-Chevy Chase October 18, they affirmed their plan of completing the school by the president of that association to make a definite statement October 22, they wrote another answer promising the new unit of the school if elected, which is what the Democratic organization previously had promised."

"Schools can not be built without money and it is entirely impractical to attempt to double or treble the current taxes."

"The only alternative is the issuance of bonds, so the first time the question was definitely put up to them they completely reversed their stand and told the people they intended to do exactly what we have done in the past."

Prescott further stated that the Fusion party claims it is going to give the government back to the people, and yet the Democratic party sponsored the primary system and every Democratic candidate placed his name before the people in the primary while the Fusion candidates were selected by a committee of "16 politicians."

He charged that James A. Cantrel, Fusion candidate for the House of Delegates, apparently was ignorant of the law when Cantrel charged the establishment of the Clarksburg liquor dispensary was illegal. Provision for the dispensary was contained in the law, Prescott said.

Miss Lavinia Engle, Democratic candidate for county commissioner, and James Pugh, candidate for State's attorney, also addressed the meeting.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

One of the most beautiful dinners of the season was given Tuesday by Mr. and Mrs. Robert V. Fleming in the ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel, in honor of the president of the American Bankers' Association, Mr. Francis M. Law and Mrs. Law.

The guests, who numbered nearly 100, were delegates to the bankers' convention, and a number of Washingtonians.

The guests were received by Mrs. Fleming and Mr. and Mrs. Law. Mrs. Fleming wore a gown of gold lame printed with small brown figures, and fashioned on princess lines with a long train. The only trimmings on the gown were two diamond and emerald clips. Mrs. Law was in a gown of black lace and chiffon fashioned with a graceful shoulder cape, with which she wore a shoulder bouquet of purple orchids.

Flowers Decorate Table.

The banquet table, which reached the length of the ballroom, was decorated with flat centerpieces of white chrysanthemums and deep red roses, while silver vases of the same flowers lined the sides of the table and were alternated with silver candelabra with red and white flowers. A string orchestra played during the dinner and later the guests assembled in the Chinese room for coffee, and gathered at the small tables for conversations.

The Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Daniel C. Roper, was present with his daughter, Mrs. David Cooker, of Hartsville, S. C.; Mr. Winthrop Aldrich, president of the Chase National Bank of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Rudolf S. Hecht, of New Orleans, were among the prominent guests. Mrs. Gary Weds Justice Townley Of N. Y. Court Ceremony Performed at the Home of Bernard F. Moran.

A wedding of wide interest here is that of Mrs. Bessie Royall Gary, who became the bride of Justice Alfred H. Townley, of the appellate division of the Supreme Court of New York, Tuesday. The ceremony took place at the home of Mrs. Gary's son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Bernard F. Moran, which was performed by Presiding Justice R. Finch. Later the couple left for a motor trip, and upon their return they will make their home at 909 Fifth avenue, New York.

The bride obtained a divorce from the former United States Minister to Switzerland, Mr. Hampson Gary, noted lawyer, now a member of the Federal Communications Commission and chairman of the broadcasting division, who now makes his home in Washington, in Reno, Nev., August 14. They were married in Palestine, Tex., December 18, 1902. Both are natives of that State. They have a son, Mr. Franklin P. Gary, a graduate of Princeton University, 1927, who later attended Oxford in the class of 1930 and now resides at Princeton. Their daughter, Mrs. Bernard Moran, was Miss Helen Gary before her marriage here several years ago.

Justice Townley's first wife, Mrs. Martha Depew Townley, who died April 16, 1930, was a niece of the late United States Senator Chauncey M. Depew.

Former Gov. Alfred E. Smith appointed Justice Townley in November, 1928, to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court bench in the First Judicial District caused by the resignation of Robert F. Wagner on his election to the United States Senate. He had been practicing law in New York for 26 years and was at the time a member of the firm of Smith, Townley & Chambers. He was reelected in 1927 for a full term.

He was appointed to the United States Naval Academy, but resigned after less than a year there and entered the New York Law School, where he was graduated in 1898. He is a member of the Manhattan Club, the Tammany Society and several legal associations.

Sister Is Visiting Mrs. James Jones

Mrs. James Ellwood Jones has as her guests for the winter at her home on Belmont road her sister, Mrs. Carl Borntrager, of Pittsburgh, and her daughter, Miss Rita Borntrager.

Mrs. Borntrager and her daughter have been frequent visitors in the Capital. Miss Borntrager was presented to society in Pittsburgh two seasons ago.

Yesterday Col. George T. Weitzel entertained at a cocktail party in honor of Mrs. Borntrager and her daughter at his apartment on Massachusetts avenue.

PILLAR To POST

THE glamour of the political salon is as potent in the New Deal as it was in the eighteenth century France. There are women in Washington today who might well be compared with the historical Mme. de Stael and the alluring Mme. Recamier. They have the same flair for bringing together the conflicting political personalities in their drawing rooms, whose cross-fire of discussion often results in a pyrotechnic display.

One woman whose background and personal qualifications fit her for the role of conducting a political salon is Mrs. Dan Cunningham, an economic adviser in the NRA. She was the most prominent woman supporter of Senator William Gibbs McAdoo in California. She is also a close friend of Alfred E. Smith and Long has been a power in Democratic politics. In addition to a keen analytical mind, she has loads of personal charm. Tall and extremely blonde, the words stately and queenly may be applied to her without exaggeration. At one of her informal cocktail parties the other day (that are becoming talked about as the most interesting gatherings in town), she wore a powder blue tea gown with a wide sash of mulberry velvet, looped at the back with one end hanging to the hemline.

WASHINGTON has had a long line of famous political hostesses. Alice Roosevelt Longworth was reputed to have had enormous influence, exerted indirectly through powerful political personages she invited to dinner. Before Mr. McAdoo, McCormack married Representative Sims and moved to New Mexico, her Sunday evening suppers were famous as political soirees. Mrs. J. Borden Harriman's home was a gathering place for leading Democrats while it was a lost cause, but now that the battle is won she seems to have lost interest. The stage is set for newcomers in this field of political entertaining and Mrs. Dan Cunningham is emerging at the top of the list.

Gretchen, as her friends call her, has a sense of drama in planning her parties, and she selected as leading lady for her last affair Mrs. Horace Dobbins, of Philadelphia and Pasadena, Calif. She is tall with dark eyes and hair, a perfect foil for the vivid Mrs. Cunningham. She wore unrelieved black of lustrous crepe, and her pale interesting face did not have a vestige of make-up. Her home on Mount Le Conte (they own the mountain) overlooks the fogs over Pasadena, with a clear view over the Pacific to the Catalina Islands.

It resembles a mosque, with a huge round dome, and Mrs. Dobbins found inspiration for the design in Tunis. She planned it down to the last detail, including the lions that guard the gates. Education is one of her hobbies, and after employing high-priced specialists to tutor her children, she invited her friends to send their children, founding a school.

She and her husband, who own yachts and several palatial homes, are to be classed among the wealthy intellectuals who hope to see the old order pass with the dawning of a new day for the workers and the more even distribution of wealth. Mrs. Dobbins is passionately interested in the new theory of "Social Credit." The idea seems to be that money, instead of being based on gold shall be based on national resources, and every man, woman and child shall receive an income from $10 to $25 a month.

AMONG other interesting guests were Miss Annabel Mathews, member of the United States Board of Tax Appeals; Dr. Gilmore Ames, physician and artist, and Mrs. Ames; Mr. and Mrs. Jones R. Davis, recently returned from China; Mrs. Carol Stewart and Mrs. Thornton Brown, judges of the Veterans Appeal Board; Col. J. Carroll Cone, assistant director of the aeronautics branch of the Commerce Department; Col. Arnold, former Assistant Attorney General; Mrs. Harry Blair (Emily Newell Blair); Mrs. Edna Rankin McKinnon, sister of the first woman Representative, Jeanette Rankin, and Donald McKinnon, brother of the explorer.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY: Secrets always leak out somehow or other. Mildred English was contentedly sipping her cup of tea (in ye olde lounge) Tuesday afternoon—enjoying the day and her secret. Her companions—Mary Patterson and Mary Kay Spinks—seemed to be hugely delighted with something, and not until the orchestra struck up a familiar tune did Mildred know the reason for the catenary expressions on the faces of the other two, for the tune was none other than "Happy Birthday to You."

Betsy Dern—whose political studies awe and inspire me—apparently is not confining her searchings to books or professional lectures—yesterday afternoon I met her on her way to see "Bring on the Girls," which gives a different slant on Governmental affairs in its innocent fun-poking way. Betsy was wearing a wine-colored corduroy sports suit with a matching felt hat and looked very smart, indeed.

Mannequins Parade Winter Fashions at Connecticut Avenue Merchants' Show

8,000 Witness
At Mayflower

Many Stunning Dresses, Hats and Coiffures Are Exhibited.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

WINTER fashions, ranging from riding habits to tea gowns, were exhibited yesterday by Connecticut Avenue merchants at their second semiannual style show in the Mayflower ballroom.

An hour before the first parade of the mannequins early yesterday afternoon, hundreds of women, with a liberal sprinkling of men, had grouped themselves on the balcony and at the base of the stage's runway. Long before the first model dipped and swayed across the stage the huge ballroom was packed.

Grandmotherly looking women plopped down on the floor and sat tailor-fashion among girls in their teens. Buxom matrons perched on railings around the room, determined to see those wicked evening gowns they'd been reading about.

Three performances of the style show were given. Total attendance was near the 8,000 mark, almost 1,000 more than attended the spring show of the Connecticut Avenue Merchants Association.

The clothes ran heavily to dressy afternoon types, formal evening dresses, and tea gowns. Berteen's exhibited a deep brown tunic dress with silver buttons arranged in neat rows which gave a stiff, military effect. The model's hat was a rather large brown felt with flat crown and brim turned up rakishly on one side.

The same shop showed another tunic dress. This one had a plaid metallic top over a dark velvet skirt. It was one of those costumes that seem expressly intended for sipping cocktails at dusk.

Stunning Cocktail Dress Shown.

One of the most stunning of the several cocktail dresses shown was from Pasternak's. This was an elaborate, dress-up affair with long, swishing skirt of gold and black lame. When the mannequin removed the brief jacket, a gold lamé bodice was revealed. The bodice was waisted out in back to the waist and had the ultra-fashionable square neckline in front. A close-fitting black velvet hat had a propeller-like affair on one side.

Most of the evening gowns bore a terrifying number of vertebrae. A shiny plaid taffeta from the Francis Shop had plenty of front, but virtually no back. Pasternak's showed a sensational bronze satin gown which left the mannequin's back completely bare except for two narrow straps far out on the shoulders.

Tea gowns from Elizabeth Arden were worn by a red-head-like young woman who floated down the runway. Her adeptness at managing huge, fan-shaped trains won applause as she pirouetted on the narrow platform.

Coiffures by Connecticut avenue hairdressers were watched as closely as the gowns. Just as the audience had decided those queer, top-heavy styles in the fashion magazines were not for Washington, out stepped a maiden with curls piled on the top of her head and fenced in with a gold filigree band. An old-fashioned nosegay and bouquet, full of white and pink roses, were tucked into the demure coiffure.

Audience Applauds Ensemble.

At sight of the damsel who looked as if she had stepped from a family photograph album, the sophisticated, daring evening gowns were forgotten.

Each shop showed four costumes. The style parade had barely begun before the mass of spectators divided into little camps over favorite mannequins. An auburn-haired girl came down the runway with peculiar skating movements. A burst of applause followed her as she glided off the stage. She was followed by a fresh-looking young person who seemed unconcerned about it all and trotted up and down as though she were on her way to the grocery store. Broad smiles and echoing chuckles showed appreciation for this departure from the stinky, affected walk of the other mannequins.

Tango Exhibition Staged.

The fashion show ended with an exhibition tango by pupils from the Pemberton studio while the mannequins formed a semicircle at the back of the stage. As the dancers whirled more and more feverishly in the dance the mannequins, notwithstanding bare backs, were forced against the prickly palms bordering the stage.

But prickly palms, the pop of flashlights, an hour of squatting on the floor, and a temperamental microphone through which the gowns were described, were soon forgotten by the mannequins as they tore themselves out of borrowed finery in the dressing rooms and by the crowd as it milled about, gazing at the exhibits.

Shoes, flowers, antiques, candies, hats, lingerie, wines, photographs, glassware and dresses were arranged in attractive booths representing the members of the Connecticut Avenue Association.

In charge of the fashion show and exhibit was Lawrence Rubel, who was assisted by Louis Massey, acting president of the association, and by a committee composed of C. A. Martin, Charles Camaller, and John Saffell.

Metallic Fabrics of Brown and Black Among Leaders at Fashion Display

Slit Skirts for Daytime and Daring
Decolletes for Evening in Vogue.

HIGHLIGHTS of the new winter fashions gleaned from the elaborate style show presented yesterday by the Connecticut Avenue Merchants Association include metallic fabrics, high-crowned hats, and slit skirts for daytime, and bouffant skirts, skin-tight bodices, and daring decolletes for evening.

With few exceptions the daytime dresses were in dark colors, even though metallic threads sparkled and gleamed from their surfaces. Brown and black were favorites, with green scarcely noticeable in the showing. Belts encircled almost every waist. Sometimes these belts were narrow strips of leather. More often they were wide, girder affairs of the frock's material.

Necklines of the daytime costumes were high and frequently draped beneath the chin. Sleeves were invariably long and plain. The dolman cut was used for only a few models. Regulation armholes were preferred to either dolman or raglan types.

Shoes Cover Inside.

Shoes to accompany street and afternoon clothes covered the instep. Oxfords that laced up the front or buttoned on one side were in the lead. Most of them were of dull leathers, including suede and antelope, and enveloped the feet in long, unbroken lines to the ankle bone.

Hats were more extreme than they have been since the Empress Eugenie flurried several seasons ago. This winter the hats drip over the eyes in the manner of wilted lilies or rear off the forehead in the approved Rock of Gibraltar style. Compromises at the fashion show were in the minority and usually consisted of brimmed chapeaus which swooped low on one side and shot up on the other. Veils failed to put in an appearance, even with cocktail costumes.

Evening attire was daring and sophisticated in a well-known sort of way or was as quaint as great-grandmother's Sunday-go-to-meeting dress. The daring gowns exposed a large share of the upper torso, but there was an absence of sequins, spangles, feathers, and other doodads.

Skirts Molded to Figure.

Skirts of the low-cut models were usually molded to the figure along Mae West lines. Demure types of taffeta moire or slipper satin had voluminous skirts, basque waists and drop-shoulder lines. Black or creamy beige were used for these old-fashioned looking dresses.

At the left illustrated a union of these two major trends. The material is a fine, dark, embroidered with satin flowers. Nothing could be more quaint than that. But note the low neckline in back with the halter effect. This modern touch is also contrasted by the bustle arrangement on the trailing skirt.

Flowers were worn on the wrist as often as they were posed on the shoulder. Gardenias and orchids received equal attention.

Evening wraps were long and sumptuous. A floor-length black velvet one had white fur massed at the top. A gold metal cloth coat extended to the knees and had a three-tiered capelet collar.

Sandals were shown with formal gowns, but they were more sturdy than those skimpy affairs everybody danced in last winter. Black trimmed with gold or silver led the shoe parade for after-dark.

Natural Make-Up Favored For Brunettes in Daytime

By Frances Mangum.

IN CONTRAST with the blonde who must use her make-up with restraint is the brunette who gives hers a free hand. With her jet black or dark brown hair, intense and vivid rouges give a warmth and glow of color that intensifies her eyes and hair and flatters her creamy white or olive skin.

For daytime wear this season brunettes are veering toward the natural. Last year bright rouges and lipsticks were the vogue, but this year both are more subdued.

For evening, however, any tinge of conservatism is tossed to the four winds and there's a riot of color again. Lipstick and rouges match in brilliance. Powder is either a luminous evening shade such as green, a pale lavender or else a soft ivory to accentuate the contrast between hair and eyes and skin.

Eye-shadow, of course, may be blue, green, gold, silver or purple, depending on the shade most in keeping with the frock, and best suited to the natural skin shadows around the eyes.

The brunette who has very dark brown or black hair often does without rouge in the daytime, but makes up for this with scarlet lips. Such make-up is trying and should not be risked unless the skin is exceptionally smooth and clear. In such instances it is highly important for the eyes to be made up with mascara and shadow, and brows emphasized with light strokes of the darkener.

Brunettes with brown hair and eyes will find that generous touches of rouge are by far more becoming. They also will see that a vinegar rinse will bring out the coppery glints in their hair and lend a dead brown golden tint.

Bright colors in clothes are much to be catered to. Oranges, reds and bright greens are ideal for accentuating the dark attractiveness of brunettes. Brown is considered highly flattering for the "brown" brunettes, just as black is for those with darker hair and eyes.

Strictly Speaking

Questions.

1. "What is the correct pronunciation for ingenu?" A. F. P., Washington, D. C.
2. "Is divorcee properly called de-vore-see or di-vor-see? I am under the impression the latter pronunciation is correct because the last syllable in the word carries a written accent in French. Am I right?" G. L., Roanoke, Va.
3. "Is fiasco a good English word? If so, is the 'a' short?" F. D., Frederick, Md.

Answers.

1. Ingenu is pronounced an-jay-nu. The first two syllables are very short, and the slight accent falls on the last syllable. The 'a' in the first syllable is as in 'at.' The second 'a' is long.
2. Divorcee is properly called de-vore-see. The last syllable is accented slightly more than the other two.
3. Yes, but it is pronounced fee-AHS-ko, not fee-AS-ko.

Are Intellectual Women
Most Resented by Own Sex?

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I, too, read your column with interest. It reveals rare wisdom and good sense. But I do often wonder why that old myth about the mental superiority of the male sex should keep cropping up. I suspect women themselves are responsible; lazy-minded women who refuse to discipline their brains to any real work; indolent women who would rather butterfly around, leaving the mental effort to the men of the family.

Men do not resent brains in women. Rather, they flock to their banner. You have only to read history or look about you at the smart women of the times for proof of that.

Due to the old hokum, men have at times resented women entering their fields, but once a woman proves her ability and actual brains for the job, men accept her wholeheartedly. How often we hear a man say unreservedly, "She's a smart woman;" or "She's got brains."

If anyone fiercely resents brains in a woman, it's other women, indolent women who feel the lash of the contrast. But instead of developing whatever mental powers they have, they follow the path of least resistance and strive to keep alive the old myth of woman's intellectual inferiority. They prefer merely to be females of the species.

Any man who believes women as a sex are mentally inferior has simply been duped. Because of their training, many men have thought they wanted cunning wives, but what a painful disillusionment was theirs if they got that kind.

Of course, men dislike the know-it-all type of woman, the know-it-all type of woman, the know-it-all type of woman, those traits just as intensely in a man.

"Housewife" seems to treasure having it said of her that she has brains but conceals them. Sounds like a doubtful commitment. Just a polite way, perhaps, of saying a person has brains but doesn't use them. Whenever I see a husband with that chronically harassed, unhappy look, I think either he has a dumb wife, or one who does not use her brains, which, practically speaking, amounts to the same thing.

Heaven knows the world needs the use of all available brains, whether in men or women. Every truly smart person knows all human beings are so full of faults and frailties that it is stupid to speak of any general superiority. I hope I'm not taking too much space, but I want to thank you, Miss Haworth, for giving me opportunity to get this out of my system. Sincerely yours, DAILY READER.

About "Brainy" Women.

DEAR DAILY READER: Well, at least "Housewife," who voiced the wish in last Saturday's column to hear "more discussion of the problem" of intellect in women, gets in your letter the benefit of yet another woman's point of view.

I don't altogether agree with you that it is a doubtful compliment for a man to say of a woman she has brains, yet conceals them. I think perhaps it's man's way of expressing gratitude at finding a woman who makes no ostentatious display of her cultivated intellect. It's no mean intellectual feat for a woman to convey to men the idea she has brains without making them the ace card in her social hand, and I should say the woman who did so both possessed brains and was using them.

Man—as I have observed him—isn't constitutionally resentful of women with brains. What he resents, rather, is the so-called "brainy woman" who, having made the exciting discovery her cerebrum actually functions, forthwith abandons the cultivation of ingratiating feminine charm and devotes herself single-mindedly to developing and demonstrating learnedness.

But he reveals in the company of a cultured woman whose intelligence enables her to supplement his masculine outlook on life with the other half of the picture, clearly seen through feminine eyes, providing she is a person as agreeable to look upon as to listen to.

Can't say I've ever seen many men fiercely resentful of another woman's mental vigor or intellectual supremacy. I've seen them admiring, amused, wistful, indifferent—but seldom fiercely resentful.

The so-called "dumb" woman's disparagement of her intellectual sister is usually voiced more in a spirit of light-hearted ridicule than of malicious envy. She knows intuitively she has little to fear in the way of competition so long as the world continues to be so largely populated with men whose prime requisite of women is adulation, however uncomprehending.

Bankers Urged To Understand Clients' Needs

MISS MINA M. BRUERE.

New York City woman banker, says sympathy and understanding may be woman's great contribution to banking field.

BANKING WOMEN must draw as much upon their natural qualities of sympathy and understanding as upon their technical knowledge and professional training, if they are to be of help in resolving the present economic crisis this year. Because today, more than ever before, there is need for bankers to display more sympathetic understanding of clients' problems, and to exert more patient effort in meeting clients' needs.

That's the situation as seen by Miss Mina M. Bruere, assistant secretary of the New York City's Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., who was trained for banking with such men as George W. Davison, James A. Stillman, Sr., and Mr. Vanderlip.

As delegates to the twelfth annual convention of this country's Association of Bank Women eddied out of the Sulgrave Club, at 1801 Massachusetts avenue, yesterday evening, following the concluding meeting and election of officers, Miss Bruere tarried to discuss ideals which banking women are carrying into the next year's work.

Competition With Men Scouted.

"We've never had a more thoughtful meeting than this year's. Never have delegates so consecrated themselves to learning how to make a greater personal contribution to the profession they serve," Miss Bruere said.

"We feel it absolutely necessary that banking women put themselves into intelligent relationship with the whole trend of banking developments and banking legislation in this country; keep themselves currently informed of such developments nationally, in their own State, and particularly in the community they are actually serving; that they be able to interpret intelligently to those they serve the significance and the necessity of changing laws under which banks must function in future.

"I think it amateurish even to discuss the hypothesis that women are competitors with men in the banking field. They are complementary, purely. They never came into the banking field on a competitive basis; but, rather, to bring a cooperative and perhaps a supplementary point of view—an understanding of women clients' problems which women can supply.

"In every phase of social, financial, industrial and economic enterprise, happier results obtain when there is brought to bear the combined point of view of both men and women."

Need of Special Aid Noted.

When Miss Bruere was placed in charge of the Woman's Department of the Central Union Trust Co. (which later became the Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co.) in 1921, it was necessary for her not only to pass upon blue prints for quarters the department would occupy, but to formulate the department's policy as well.

"During the war years and after, men sensed in a way that women clients needed help of a kind they were not prepared to give; but they hadn't crystallized in their own minds just what that help must be," Miss Bruere said. "So women department heads were for the most part expected to develop their own projects, and some of them, quite inevitably, went far afield. They were conducting shopping services, hiring servants, making travel arrangements, buying theater tickets. But very soon they discovered their mistake and got back on the right path.

"And today I think every one of them realizes her value and her contribution lies in acting as a liaison officer between the woman client and the various departments which may be of technical and professional service to her: in creating in the banking institution an atmosphere of encouragement and sympathetic understanding less formidable than a large banking room oftentimes holds out to the woman inexperienced in carrying financial responsibility.

No Escape Seen for Woman From Her Role of Adapter To the Needs of Mankind

By Malvina Lindsay

AND NOW, it seems, women are too personal-minded in business. A few years ago they were too emotional in politics and before that too flighty in love. Who, in fact, can remember a time when they were not too this or too that?

Most women, no doubt, are weary of hearing these accusations. In view of the recent discussions in books and magazines of their weaknesses in business and professional life, it is surprising that irate armies of feminists have not risen to ask:

What about men in business? What about the fussy little fellows who stage a St. Vitus dance whenever anyone touches their scissors or monkey with their seat pads? What about the pompous martinets with executive complexes who bellow at office boys and bully weaklings? What about the irascible Jehovahs who kick desks and sling paste pots when a detail goes wrong? What about the whispering office politicians who bandy gossip and "tell teacher?"

WHAT about—but why, after all, should women waste their energy asking such questions? Everyone knows that men in business and professional life are as jealous, petty, primitive and weak as women. Why, then, one might logically ask, this eternal making over of women?

On the surface it does seem unfair that the burden of being perfect, the task of adaptation should lie so heavily upon women. How can a wife hold her husband? How can a girl get one? How can a woman make herself more beautiful and more fascinating? How can she become a better conversationalist, a better harp player, a better mother? How can a business woman become the perfect cross between a robot and Helen of Troy?

Seldom, if ever, does one hear: How can a man make himself more engaging to women? How can he be a better talker, a better husband, a better father? How can he become the perfect boss to his secretary? The unfortunate truth is that man never will be called upon to answer these questions. Women might as well realize that they will go on to the end of their days being remolded to fit the needs of society.

SINCE the dawn of civilization woman has been the adapting agency. In her cave and later in her camp, through her primitive arts and industries, she was laying the foundation of civilization, humanity's greatest adaptation project. She has continued through the years to be the go-between of man and nature, and has softened the rigors of a ruthless and inanimate world.

More important, she has paved the way for human cooperation. Man, in fact, through his lack of adaptation in human relationships—in less polite words, his bull-headedness—has given impetus to economic strife; to war, great destructive force of civilization.

There is no escape for woman from her destiny as adapter. In the home, in the office, in the factory, in the ballroom, she will have to continue to give, to take, to make over, to change. And fortunate she is to have such a mission. For thereby lies the way of progress, orderly living, harmonious human contact; even, perhaps, of universal peace.

Royal Pair Follows Romantic Tradition

Prince George and Princess Marina have followed precedents in spending part of their period of courtship at Balmoral, the royal private residence in Scotland. It was there that Prince Frederick William of Prussia (afterward the Emperor Frederick) proposed to Princess Royal as they rode together on the hills. Dismissing her plucked a piece of white heather and presented it to the "Rose of England." There the Marquis of Lorne wooed Princess Louise during a visit to Queen Victoria.

Girls' Mural Depicts Distribution of Milk

Four girls ranging in age from 10 to 14 years of age, have placed on exhibit in New York a mural depicting the production and distribution of milk. The girls painted the mural in the last six weeks at the Children's Center of the Children's Aid Society. The mural is 33 feet long, and is done in the modernistic style. Frank Stearn, a PWA artist, supervised the girls as they drew the original small sketches, and later in proportioning the figures in the mural.

Women avid for sight of the new winter styles jammed the ballroom of the Mayflower yesterday when the Connecticut Avenue Merchants Association presented its second semiannual style show. Antique Shop Stands Toll Of the Times

Curiosities of Bygone Era
Fill 40-Year-Old F Street Store.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

FORTY YEARS bring many changes in the lives of people. But shop stands the toll of time better. Certainly an antique shop only a few blocks from F street has met the passage of years in a picturesque fashion.

Forty years ago it stood very much as it does today. The customers who walked up and down between the heaps of furniture were wide-brimmed hats and long, laced-up frocks. There were gentlemen in double-breasted suits, trousers tapering at the ankles. But there was the old furniture, very much as it is today, antique sofas, desks, chairs, clocks, candelabra. Some of these, old today, might have been new then. For instance, the queer old music boxes, made in Switzerland and selling for $1,500.

Another curiosity is a Turkish wall piece, complete even to a small clock stand.

Aside from this array of odd pieces, however, there are spool beds one for $12, not yet refinished. Once it was a bright maple, but someone painted it black. The outer surface is peeling off, however, and the Colonial bed in all its maple splendor, peeps through between the paint cracks.

There is a lovely old drop-leaf table which opens out into a large dining-room table. It's a charming piece with graceful spindle legs, and exceedingly fine grain wood in its panels.

Freshener for Oily Skin.

A beauty stylist realized that women with oily skin look bedraggled far more quickly than those with normal or dry skin. The surplus oil on the face catches the dust and dirt particles and make-up is soon obscured.

In order to give women with this type of complexion some means of keeping as pretty as they are when they leave home in the morning, she grouped together several of her special beauty preparations. The set is called a "freshener for oily skin."

That's just what it is. A liquid cleanser takes all the grime and old make-up from the face. A skin stimulant brings the blood to the surface and increases circulation. A nourishing cream gives a smooth, glowing quality to the skin. A make-up lotion or powder base—your choice—lends that final velvet finish which the powder completes.

Colorful Sets Featured.

Plenty of color to the costume is the aim of the chic hat, scarf and glove sets featured in the neckwear department of a local store. Brush wool hats with small stitched brims are in red, gray, brown and bright blue. A little feather, a bright spiky touch, perks up on one side. Carrying out the color which fits close around the neck and secures the chill away. And so with the gloves, bright woolly things of a jaunty knit pattern.

Pad That Keeps Feet Warm.

One way of saving the cool bill is to rely on an ingenious heating pad to keep your feet warm at night. It's not like the old-fashioned hot-water bottle that required ten minutes to prepare, that burned blisters and cooled down in a couple of hours.

Here's a heating pad that's scientific. It's wireless and nonelectric, but it contains an element which generates heat when moistened. All you do is unbutton a flap and pour in two tablespoonfuls of cold water and tilt gently side to side for a few seconds until the heat starts.

Once heated it will stay that way for eight or ten hours. When the refill is empty, remove it from the cover, let it cool and dry, and your midge furnace is all ready to use again.

Small heating pads are on sale now at a downtown store for 69 cents.

Cork Boxes Useful.

Cork boxes are filled with white and cream stationery, plain, and in exquisite taste. When this is used up there still is the box, odd, interesting looking for cigarettes. This box and stationery arrangement make splendid consolation prizes for bridge parties or remembrance gifts. They cost only 50 cents a piece.

For Chapped Lips.

They look at first like lipsticks in attractive metal covers. But when you open one of them, you see that its contents are clear and colorless. Rubbed over chapped and rough lips, it softens them. If applied on the lips before you venture out, it forms a coating that protects them from chapping and peeling. It may be rubbed on over the lipstick. In this way it helps keep the lipstick on and gives it a glossy finish.

Rain Capes No Trouble.

Rubberized rain capes are fine for carrying over your arm in dry weather or draping over your shoulders in wet weather. They're so light and convenient that whether they're worn or carried they're no trouble.

Capes of this sort fit nicely over coats and prove a big asset in the end. They come in a rubberized fabric in checks, plaids and prints in green, blue, brown.

Tailored Frocks Is Popular With the Business Woman

Pattern No. 686.

BUSINESS women will choose this tailored frock because it looks just right for the office. Young suburban matrons will like it because it's a golf and daytime classic.

There is a reason for the popularity of the shirtwaist dress. Its collar and neckline are easy to wear; there is just enough fullness through the bodice to be becoming; the lines of the skirt are straight, with walking freedom provided by inverted pleats.

This pattern may be made up in heavy sports silk, dark flat crepe, velvet, flannel, or light-weight wools. It is cut in sizes 14 to 20; 32 to 38. Size 18 (36) requires 4½ yards of 39-inch fabric, and ¾-yard for the tie.

Oyster Prized Dish Among The Romans

Indian Given Credit for Discovering Delicacy in This Country.

By Dorothea Duncan.

CLEOPATRA set the fashions in the days of the Roman Empire. However, history leads us to believe that Caesar planned the menus. Humming bird tongues on toast were used sparingly, but the "ostrea" was plentiful and highly prized among the Romans. The "ostrea" today in English-speaking countries is an oyster. Sallust (86-35 B. C.), after returning from a jaunt to England with Caesar, said he could find only one good thing in the Britons: they eat oysters.

The Greeks had a word for oyster, too—"ostrea." The word means bone or shell. The French took the term and changed it to "olstro" and from this our word oyster is derived.

An Indian is given credit for discovering the oyster in America. One day he was fishing and seeing a peculiar looking "stone" in the water, stretched out his hand to it. The oyster shell closed on his finger. He smashed the shell from his hand with his tomahawk, put his finger in his mouth and discovered the delicious flavor of the oyster.

Part of Local Custom.

Oysters were so popular in early England that they featured in the social customs of the country. In the midlands, at Christmas, oyster suppers were given. They were gala affairs. Ale, porter, light wines, English gin, Irish or Scotch whisky were served. Rum and brandy were taboo since they were considered incompatible with oysters.

The oyster supper custom holds sway in this country, especially among churches in small towns. These are not as brilliant as the suppers of the English midlands, but the custom no doubt originated among the people who came from England.

Until recently oysters have been part of our diet, because we enjoyed them. Little has been said or written about their valuable food properties except that, like all sea food, they are rich in iodine. One warning always accompanies their consumption—ice cream should not be eaten with them. This superstition has passed, however, and now we know that oysters on the half shell may be safely followed by a chocolate sundae—that is, provided you are eating fresh sea food and your digestive system is unimpaired.

Dietitians hold that oysters form one of our most perfect foods. They are rich in vitamins A, B, C, D and G, and they contain iodine, iron, copper, manganese, protein, calcium and phosphorus. All these are valuable from a "nutrition" standpoint.

Recipe for Oyster Stew.

Here is an idea that will please many a man or woman who has to watch calories constantly. Oysters are a splendid recipe for a diet because they have a low caloric value. They are easily digested, too, and if care is taken to procure fresh oysters, even persons with delicate digestive systems should be able to indulge in oysters on the half shell or in steaming, fragrant stew.

Oyster stew is a dish that may be enjoyed by the whole family. Follow this recipe for a delectable dish:

4 tablespoon butter or butter substitute.
Salt, pepper, paprika.

Put cleaned oysters, strained oyster liquor, butter and seasonings into saucepan and simmer gently until oysters curl at the edges. Add the milk and bring quickly to the simmering point. Serve very hot.

West's Opening lead was the club Jack, which the Declarer naturally did not know headed a seven-card suit. South immediately saw that the hand was a laydown if he merely trumped two clubs in Dummy. The third losing club could be discarded on the heart King and the contract could thus be made without resorting to any risky attempts to set up the diamond suit or the heart suit. Nothing but four trumps in one hand would beat the hand if this play worked out successfully.

South, despite the fact that the contract seemed to be a simple one, saw no reason not to take every precaution to prevent over-ruffs. He knew that if he won the first club trick with the Ace and then ruffed two clubs in Dummy there was a better chance that the third round would be overruled than that the second would, though it seemed unlikely that either possibility would materialize. South accordingly trumped the first club in Dummy, declining to let the trick ride around to the Ace. He returned to his hand with the diamond Ace and won trumped a second club. The Aces of spades and hearts were played, and now, to get back to his hand, South ruffed a heart. Naturally, it appeared better to South to attempt to get into his own hand by ruffing the second round of a six-card suit, hearts, than the second round of a seven-card suit, diamonds. When South's small trump held the trick, he now drew the remaining trump, and claimed the balance. The heart King, of course, still remained in Dummy to take care of the losing club.

Had South not taken every precaution, he would have gone down. A glance at the East and West hands shows that either the third round of clubs or the third round of hearts would have been overtrumped and the contract automatically defeated. I can just visualize a great many players who I have encountered (and who incidentally think they are top-notchers) playing the hand in a careless manner and when the third club or the third heart was overtrumped, complaining bitterly about the bad breaks they were getting. They would be the last people in the world to get my sympathy as there is absolutely no excuse for losing a hand when all that is necessary to make it a bit of care.

How to Keep Well

Headache.

ALTHOUGH headache is a common symptom it is not easy to trace the exact cause and it is often difficult to find a satisfactory remedy.

Pain can exist only in the presence of an active nerve supply and the tissues of the scalp are richly supplied with nerves. Within the skull the coverings of the brain (meninges) are exceedingly sensitive and are supplied with tiny twigs of the same nerve that is the seat of trigeminal neuralgia or tic douloureux. The brain itself is not sensitive. This portion of the body under local anesthesia may be explored with the patient unaware of what is going on.

To understand the subject of headache we must consider the eyes, ears, nose, nasal cavities, and teeth. Pain from eyestrain is well known. It arises particularly when the eyes are overworked in the absence of proper correcting glasses or in the presence of excessive fatigue of the eye muscles. This is one of the chief causes of the kind of headache of which the individual is conscious on awaking or which occurs early in the morning. The pain is usually felt over the forehead.

Any increased pressure within the skull due to a rise of pressure in the blood vessels or to a toxin in the blood may result in a throbbing or bursting headache. Pressure of this character is rarely continuous. It may come on during the morning, exist for an hour or two, and then disappear for two or three days. Quite characteristic is the observation that the pain is usually increased by coughing, bending over, sneezing, or severe physical exertion.

In attempting to ascertain the cause of headache careful investigation must be made as to possible head injuries, disease of the middle ear, or defective vision. Toxins are a well-known cause of headache and are associated with many infectious such as chronic sinus disease, scarlet fever, typhoid fever.

Child Chats

By Alice Fox Pitts.

THERE is probably not a household in the city under 15 years of age, where homework does not present a pressing problem. At Parent-Teacher meetings, one mother complains that her daughter has so many lessons to do that she has no time for exercise; the mother of another student in the same class wants to know how her boy can ever pass his college entrance examinations since he rates low marks in school and brings home no school work.

A public school, teaching thousands of pupils, can not adjust its curriculum to the needs of each individual student. The remarkable thing is the willingness of teachers and principals to adapt the program to meet individual needs, if parents will take the trouble to consult them.

If your child is burdened with homework and is ruining health and curtailing recreation to do it, it is likely that she is taking her work more seriously than even her teachers expect. She may be spending hours on perfecting work which is intended to be done easily, for training in quick thinking. If your child (and it's usually a boy) says that he has no homework, it is probable that he is shirking assigned tasks. In either case, a personal interview with the teacher will go a long way to smoothing out the difficulty. At the same time, you can obtain valuable guidance on the most question of how much help it is advisable for parents to give children on their home lessons.

Jennifer Hale

By Rob Eden

Suspected of the murder of David Corve, Jennifer Hale changes her name to Mary Dixon and flees to Seattle because, though innocent, she can not face the notoriety involved. Parker Lee, friend of the murdered man, knows her whereabouts and he sends her $1,000 and urges her to go still further away.

She meets Kent Severn, who gives her a job in his father's lumber company and falls in love with her. Through one of the girls in the office, Nita, she meets Andy Young and is charmed to discover he is a detective. Kent's mother, disapproving his interest in Mary, tells his father she is going to hire a detective to find out anything in Mary's past life detrimental to her.

DON'T see what good it will do, going to a private detective agency," Severn grumbled.

"Don't you? Well, I do. And, Henry, I'm having Emily, too, for the house party. I'll ask some detached man for her. She knows about it," Emily Vinson not only knew about it, she was a party to it, for Mrs. Severn had talked over her plans about Kent thoroughly before coming down to the office. Emily thought with Mrs. Severn that all was the only way.

Andy was the only member of the firm in the office when Mrs. Severn called. He seated her across the desk from him and waited for her to tell him why she had come. He was accustomed to clients who were wives of wealthy business men. Usually they wanted their husbands watched or their husbands' girl friends trailed, or they wanted advice on some jewelry they had pawned.

This was the first time, however, that Andy Young had been honored with a visit from Mrs. Henry Severn. He looked at her card, which was still between his fingers, and started wracking his brains for any recent scandal he had heard of the Severn family, but could think of none now that Larry Severn was engaged. Larry was the one who used to supply the hot gossip.

Mrs. Severn finally finished loosening her sable throw.

"I have rather a peculiar request to make of you, Mr. Young, but I suppose you're used to peculiar requests."

He nodded, and she laughed, a low cultured laugh. Most of Young's cases had some strange angles.

"It's about my son—"

Larry? Andy was alert. There might be money here Larry was concerned, because his wedding to a young business girl was set for the latter part of November.

"My son, Kent. You've heard of him?"

"Yes, I've heard of him," Andy was disappointed. Kent—there couldn't be much scandal about him. Never had been. Everybody in town had a high regard for him.

Stiff Competition.

"Well, it's difficult for me to explain—"

It usually was for all of Young's clients, for he didn't try to help them. He sat across from them and until he had heard their complete story, seldom made any comment. He liked his clients to be on the defensive. Good for them, he told his partner, Dale Maddigan.

"Kent worked in a stenographer, who interests in his office—"

Andy was alert again. Mary Dixon worked in his office, and from what Nita had told him last night, Kent Severn was taking Mary out. You've got stiff competition, Andy, she had teased him since he had met Mary.

"And, Mr. Young, I have no intention of letting him get tangled up with a stenographer. She waited for him to say something, but he didn't. To all appearances at the present moment, I approve highly of the girl, and I want Kent to be happy. You see?"

This time he nodded shortly. All Greek to him. He couldn't figure her out. Unless—

"Her name—the stenographer's name is Mary Dixon."

Andy nodded again. He heard the door slam in Maddigan's office next door, and the shuffle of Maddigan's feet on the floor, but he made no effort to suggest that his partner continue with the case, because he was personally involved.

That wasn't Andy Young. He liked Mary Dixon, he might even love her but business was business, and Mrs. Severn was a rich client. If not the richest who had ever sat in his shabby oak armchair.

To say that Andy was curious underdressed his feelings. He was seething, boiling with curiosity, but his face was impassive, except for his sparkling eyes. Mrs. Severn's card remained between his fingers.

"Neither myself nor my husband know anything about this—Miss Dixon, Mr. Young, except that she is a Seattle girl, and that my son met her on the 'Grace Larsen' when it hit a rock. It will, of course, be very easy to find out all about her who her friends are, what she did before she came to work for my son. I could do that myself, but I think you can do it better."

Andy dropped the card on the desk and pulled up a notebook. On the top of a fresh sheet he wrote, "Mary Dixon."

That pleased Mrs. Severn, because she felt until then that as a detective he was a failure. He didn't seem to be interested in what she was telling him. She would have been surprised to know that Andy had an extraordinary memory, and that when she left the office, he could repeat every word that she had said. If he needed to, he could dictate every word of the conversation to his stenographer, who was accustomed to his feats of memory.

"This will all be confidential, Mr. Young!"

Something indiscreet.

"Of course, Mrs. Severn. Everything that goes on in this office is confidential."

"The girl is pretty—"

Andy drew a line under Mary's name, but said nothing. He knew Mary was pretty. He didn't need to be told that.

"She's 21, Kent tells me. That means she isn't a baby. I was wondering if you couldn't try to find out something about her—something that might possibly discredit her with Kent. He has—well—Mr. Young, he is old fashioned where morals are concerned, if you know what I mean. If you could find some indiscreet thing Miss Dixon has done—do you understand me?"

"I do, Mrs. Severn." Still the thought didn't enter his mind that he could turn over the case to Maddigan, even at this late date. Dollars were very important to Andy—more important than anything else.

"When do you think you could give me a report?"

"A complete report?"

"Please—"

"I should say in about a week. There's quite a bit to be done, and it has to be done carefully."

"And quietly, Mr. Young."

"Quietly." He drew another line under Mary's name, blacker than the first.

"Now about price. I would like to have that settled, too," Mrs. Severn was a shrewd bargainer. She liked to know what a thing was going to cost before she bought it. "I'm prepared to pay whatever you think is fair. In truth, she was prepared to pay plenty in this case. It would be worth it if Mr. Young found out things about Mary Dixon, and she was able in some way to use those weapons with Kent."

Price Is Set.

"It's hard to say before the case is closed," Andy said, slowly. "It may run into expense and it may not. I won't know until later. You might leave me a check for $200 for immediate expenses, though. Say we make it $500—$600 for the case?"

Mrs. Severn nodded, and opened her purse. She drew from it a small check book. "That's fair enough, this. She was busy the next minute making out a check for Andrew Young for $200. Andy passed her a blotter, and she blotted the check carefully. Her name, Clara L. Severn, was firmly written at the bottom.

"You'll let me know when you hear anything?" She was fastening her furs.

"I'll have the report for you as soon as I can."

"The sooner the better."

When Andy was alone, he went back to the desk and picked up the check, smiling. A windfall in his lap. A veritable windfall. It wasn't every day in the Young & Maddigan Agency that you picked up a check for $200 with $500 more coming. The case wouldn't take any time at all, easy as pie. Never had a simpler job. He could get all his information from Mary—without her suspecting what he wanted—and check up on it later. Shouldn't take two days. Five hundred dollars for two days' work! Baby!

Never Entirely Honest.

Maddigan came in. "Stella tells me Mrs. Henry Severn was in."

"Yes," Andy showed him the check. Maddigan's prominent eyes popped.

"Any more coming?"

"Only for extra expenses if I need more, but I don't think I'll need more. The partners were never entirely honest with each other."

"Ought to get $50 more for extra expenses. She won't grumble," Maddigan advised.

"I might at that, but she thought $200 was a big price to check up on a stenographer."

"Husband interested in stenographer?"

Andy shook his head. "No, son, Larry. He didn't want Maddigan to know about Mary Dixon."

Maddigan left, and Young rang the Severn Lumber Co. and asked for Miss Dixon. When she came to the phone, he wondered whether she would have dinner with him that night. Mary wouldn't that night, but she might tomorrow. He could call again, and she would tell him tomorrow.

Andy hung up, grinning. "Simple!" he said to the phone. Then he laughed.

James A. Reed Lays Vote Buy To New Deal

Missouri Democrat Says Appropriations Aim at Corruption.

Detroit, Oct. 24. (AP)—A charge that New Dealers are making "a bold and insolent attempt to corrupt the electorate" through Federal appropriations was made by former United States Senator James A. Reed, in an address here tonight.

"Candidates . . . secure pledges for the expenditure of millions of dollars in their district, or State, or city, and then tell the voters that this money was furnished by the Administration, and that they are duty bound to support the hand that feeds them," the Missouri Democrat declared. "What is this but the buying of votes? It is a bold and insolent attempt to corrupt the electorate."

Reed cited a Supreme Court opinion during the War Between the States which, he said, "exploded the argument now advanced by the New Dealers" that "Congress can declare an emergency, and thereupon the Constitution ceases to be of force."

The opinion was given on a habeas corpus appeal by a citizen of Indiana who was sentenced to death by a military commission on charges of treason. The State of Indiana, by Presidential proclamation and legislative sanction, had been declared to be within the war zone, and subject to military law. The Government sought to sustain the military commission's judgment, Reed said, "upon the claim there was a great emergency, that the life of the Nation was at stake, and that, therefore, the Constitutional guaranty of right of trial by jury could be set aside."

Reed quoted the opinion by Justice Davis as follows:

"The great and good men who framed the Constitution foresaw that troublous times would arise, when rulers and people would become restive under restraint, and seek by sharp and decisive measures to accomplish their desired ends by force, and that the principles of Constitutional liberty would be in peril, unless established by irrepealable law. . . . The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace. No doctrine, involving more pernicious consequences, was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of Government. Such a doctrine leads directly to anarchy or despotism."

Wilmington, Del., Oct. 24. (AP)—Government contentions that the Weirton Steel Co. sidestepped negotiations with labor union representatives in Clarksburg, W. Va., were answered today with testimony that the plant manager made an "honest effort" to attend a scheduled conference, but was abducted.

Fighting the Government's suit, which charges interference with employees in their choice of a bargaining agent, and asks an injunction to restrain such interference, the company called its Clarksburg manager, Edward E. Paddock, who testified he was forcibly escorted from the town while en route to meet a committee of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers last August 1.

His abductors, he said, were employee representatives under the company plan who "meant business" and were "determined" not to let him meet the Amalgamated representatives.

To corroborate this testimony, the company summoned Ernest H. Holt, chairman of the employee representatives, who testified he was one of the abductors.

Queen Elizabeth of Russia was noted for her lack of promptness in considering matters of state, but her all-time record for time killing was set in 1760 when she started to sign her name to a treaty, got as far as the first three letters, then stopped and did not get around to complete the signature until six months later.

The treaty was the treaty of 1746 with Austria, up for renewal in 1760. Elizabeth approved the renewal, started to sign her name, and wrote "EL" when a wasp flew into the room and settled on the end of her pen. The queen, thus interrupted, left the bill unsigned.

It took the combined efforts of one pair of doves and all the street car motormen on the Fourth avenue line in Denver to bring a brood of young doves into the world. The dove built her nest between two live wires at Downing and Marion streets, unmindful of the fact that every time a street car passed her life was endangered.

A motorman noticed the nest and thoughtfully cut off the current as he passed under the nest. He passed the word along to other motormen, and they all let their cars coast under the spot until the fledglings were safely out of the nest.

Billie Gets a Midnight Ride.

Because of what has been going on all the week, you children have been expecting that great big Sunday dinner at Blackie's house, and you will not be disappointed, for here it is. It was just cold enough to make the fire feel good, and Jocko never saw such a good place in which to roast a yam as that lot of burning sawdust in the round fireplace.

He says that when he put some of the ham gravy on them, and then got a great big piece of ham on his plate, he didn't care a bit whether there was anything else on the table. But he says that he did eat a little each of the corn cakes and new syrup, as well as one of Mr. Man's apples and a dozen or so walnuts. And so did all the other animals.

When they had finished dinner, and were smoking their pipes, everybody clapped their hands and holloed, "Story from Billie Possum."

Billie Possum's Story.

Billie grinned and looked as foolish as he could, and said:

"Well, this isn't much of a story, but it's the best I can do on such short notice. It happened way back yonder when I was a young fellow, and before I came to the Creek. You know dogs and possums are not often good friends, and that dog certainly was no friend of mine."

"It was in persimmon time, and the biggest and sweetest ones I ever saw grew on a tree not far from a house where they kept a bird dog—an Irish setter that had long hair, and didn't have any business following a possum about, anyway. One night I went over to the tree for my supper, and had just finished and gotten down and started home, when here came that bird dog right behind me, and I want to tell you that he was a pretty good runner."

"The persimmon tree was away out in the old field, where there were no other trees except a few young pines that were only about as high as Uncle Joe's house, and that dog was getting so close behind me that there was nothing to do but climb up one of them. That dog made so much noise that it wasn't long before his master and one of his boys came running from the house with a lantern, and you can see that I was lost, for they could shine my eyes or even see me in that tree, even if I kept my eyes shut."

"But they didn't have any gun, and when they saw how little the tree was, one of them said: 'Well, we will just shake him out and let the dog catch him.' They did shake me out, but the dog didn't catch me; I caught him. I fell right on his back and he had such long woolly hair that I could hold on good, and that's just what I did. But I had to hurry or the man would kill me, and so I dug my hind claws into the dog's ribs, and he howled howls, and he outran anybody's rabbit that you ever heard of right back toward his house. Before he got home, I dug my toenails in again, good and hard, 'til he just screamed, and then I jumped down and did a little running myself. I knew he would keep going toward his house, for he had enough of possum for one night, and it wasn't long before your friend Billie was back in the old home."

Officer Proposes All U. S. Soldiers Have Tattoo Marks

Every American soldier would be tattooed, under a plan now before the War Department, the Associated Press says.

As a means of identifying dead and wounded, tattooing is advocated by Lieut. C. L. Whittle, of Fort Ontario, N. Y., in the Infantry Journal, official publication of the Infantry Association. High officers view the idea sympathetically.

Whittle says it was impossible to identify hundreds of killed and wounded in the World War because identification tags used by the Army were missing. He tentatively suggests the marks be tattooed on each shoulder and each hip. The marks could be symbols or names, but Whittle believes a number, occupying a small space, would be simplest.

Expert Avant Couriers Invade the Capital to Extol the Incoming Attractions

Pundits of the Playhouse Hav A Day in Court

Pronounce New Bills Best; Miss Sieber's Birthday; About Showshops.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Seldom does one encounter so much theatrical erudition as is present in the National Capital at the moment.

To begin with, there is Lee Kugel, a gentleman whose experience in the playhouse has spanned almost four decades and whose activities have encompassed everything from press-agency to individual and distinctly successful promoter. Mr. Kugel served his novitiate in the theater under the distinguished auspices of the late Augustin Daly. He allied himself later with such celebrated exponents of the best in drama as Eleanor Duse, the Divin Sarah Bernhardt, Sir Henry Irving and Ellen Terry and others of comparable eminence.

Having produced "Old Lady 31," among numerous other successes, allied himself with the Shuberts when they were at the height of their glory. If any, and been adviser in chief to others of the foremost producers of their day. It is important that Lee Kugel now should be in Washington in the interest of George Arliss as an exponent of the higher expressions of cinematic artistry as they might exert themselves, for example, in "The Last Gentleman," coming to the Fox screen tomorrow.

Mr. Kugel brings to his task an exalted outlook upon what he deems the function of a publicist delegated to promote the interests of so noble a star as Mr. Arliss. He points out that Mr. Arliss has absolved himself of all blame for having embraced so widely stigmatized a medium of expression as the motion picture. He defends it with an ardor that is both convincing and unsalable.

Mr. Arliss is a gentleman actor of the old school. So is Mr. Kugel among press agents. May his tribe increase.

Mr. Melcher acknowledged greetings to his virtuosity as a violinist merely with a terse and challenging postscript which says: "Dear Nelson, I'll kill you, very cordially yours, Eddie Melcher." I may have the punctuation wrong. Perhaps what he means to say is that he will kill me very cordially.

Mrs. O'Day Backed By Peace League

Group Joins Mrs. Roosevelt in Breaking Precedent.

Another precedent was broken for Mrs. Daniel O'Day, New York Democratic candidate for Representative-at-large, actively supported by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, when she received the endorsement of the Woman's International League for Peace and Freedom yesterday. It was the first time that group ever endorsed a Congressional candidate. The league, which will demand that the next Congress act in behalf of measures for disarmament and munitions control, said the New York action was the first in a campaign that would be carried to every Congressional District in the United States. Mrs. O'Day is an active member of the league.

Dern Takes Hand In River Dispute

Inspects Spillway Route for Mississippi.

Arkansas City, Oct. 24 (AP).—Faced with two rival engineering methods of controlling the Mississippi River at floodtime, Secretary of War Dern today inspected the proposed Boud Basin spillway route to see what has produced $500,000,000 in damage suits against the Government and a controversy among engineers and the 90,000 residents of the basin. Whether to eliminate the proposed spillway and rely wholly upon eight "cutoffs" which have been constructed between here and New Orleans to lower the flood level 8 feet or more during inundations such as occurred in 1927 is the problem. Since a flood stage levee was constructed near here through which the surplus water would be released into the spillway in time of flood, landowners complain they can not obtain loans on their farms.

Mrs. Roosevelt And Mrs. Hoover Sit Side by Side

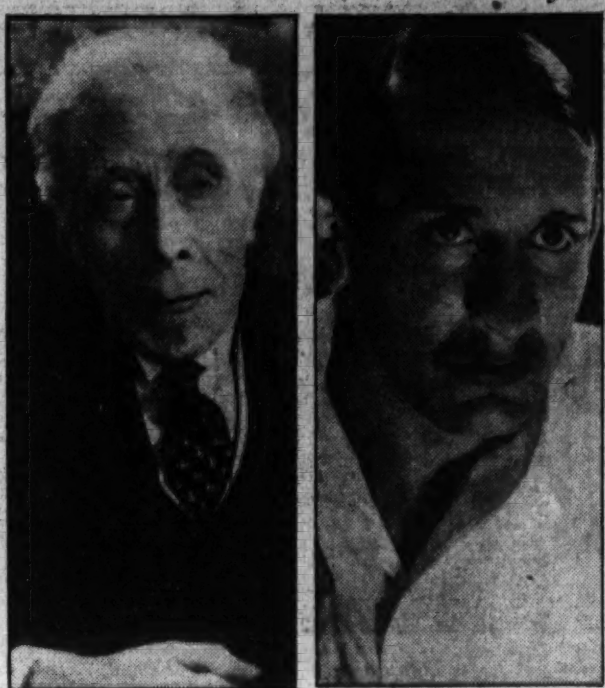

Boston, Oct. 24 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Mrs. Herbert Hoover today sat almost side by side for two hours at the Girl Scout's convention. Mrs. Roosevelt is honorary president, and Mrs. Hoover, member at large and former chairman of the board. They did not shake hands or exchange any greeting.

In her address, Mrs. Roosevelt lauded Mrs. Hoover's Girl Scout service, although she did not refer to her by name. At the end of Mrs. Hoover's one-minute speech, Mrs. Roosevelt joined in the applause.

After the session the two women went to a parlor to be photographed with other scouting leaders. Mrs. Hoover, insisting that she was merely a "simple member" of the organization, had declined to be mapped with Mrs. Roosevelt. Mrs. Roosevelt, however, insisted that she was merely a "simple member" of the organization, had declined to be mapped with Mrs. Roosevelt.

"The White Parade" An Achievement.

"The White Parade" looks to be an achievement. Produced by Jesse L. Lasky, this is a fine picture of self-sacrifice, as exemplified in the life of the hospital nurse. Conflict between love and duty is dealt with broadly in the production, which attains genuine heights of emotion, and deals with a variety of characters.

The cast, which features Loretta Young and John Boles, is exceptionally well chosen, and very brilliant performance are given by Jane Darwell, Sara Haden, Frank Conroy, Muriel Kirkland and others, while Dorothy Wilson brings a dependable note of appeal to her impersonation. Praise also for Joyce Compton, June Gittelson, Astrid Allwyn and others. The picture was taken from a novel by Rian James, and directed by Irving Cummings.

Definite Plans For "Showboat."

"Showboat" is moving up to the really stage at last. Universal produced this picture just as the talkies were coming in, and only a portion of it had dialogue in that version which featured Joseph Schildkraut and Laura La Plante.

The new picture was to have had Russ Columbo as one of its leading actors. His place is uncertain. Howard Estabrook has been assigned to do the screen play and James Whale will direct.

A special group of rumba dancers are being imported from Havana to appear in the George Raft picture, "Rumba."

William Powell or George Brent may be borrowed for the lead in "Mr. Dynamite," which Murray Roth will direct for Universal.

Frank McHugh has joined the cast of "Devil Dogs of the Air" with James Cagney and Pat O'Brien.

Mary Brian will have a try at the New York stage. She left last night to prepare for her appearance in the play, "Calling All Stars," which, as you may imagine, deals with the movie colony.

Mrs. John D. Sherman Expected to Recover

Mrs. John Dickinson Sherman, 72, Washington society and club leader, injured last Friday when struck by a bus at Seventeenth and K streets northwest, was reported "slightly improved" at Emergency Hospital yesterday.

Next Week Has Something New For Show Fans

Importance of New Bills Balances Number of Holdover Hits.

Jerome Kern and Otto Harbach form one of the most outstanding partnerships known to the modern light musical theater. Their latest collaboration, a piece known by the name of "Roberta," comes to the National Theater for the week beginning next Monday night with the prestige of a year's run in New York behind it. But not so very far behind it!

"Roberta," if for nothing else, would be notable for the song hit, "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes." But apart from this tuneful claim to distinction, it is noteworthy by reason of the caliber of its cast. Fay Templeton, grande dame of the American musical stage, perpetuates a tradition of the song and dance production, and is ably assisted by Tamara, the young Russian, who is able to survive on one name; the California Collegians, an insane band that appeared not so long ago, when Max Gordon thought he had closed "Roberta" for the season, at the Earle, Odette Myrtil, Marty May and Raymond Middleton. Bobby Jarvis, Sydney Greenstreet, Parker Stewart and others of comparable rating add to the enlivening of this particular evidence of Max Gordon's skill in casting.

At Loew's Fox Theater, for the week beginning tomorrow, George Arliss will be the pictured star in "The Last Gentleman," a subject that fits him down to the ground, as the saying goes. Mr. Arliss here has another victory perfectly attuned to his highly developed talents. He also, as usual, has the advantage of a splendid supporting company, led by Edna May Oliver, Joseph Cawthorn, Janet Beecher, Ralph Morgan, Donald Meek and Rafaela Ottman. The vaudeville portion of the entertainment will be headlined by Bob Murphy, well-known to Washington audiences.

The Warner Brothers' Earle Theater next week beginning tomorrow, will present one of the most discussed productions of the season in Josef von Sternberg's "The Scarlet Empress," in which the title role is played by her accustomed Marlene Dietrich. John Lodge is cast in the male role of prime importance. In this subject, Herr von Sternberg has attempted to weld the important elements of drama, spectacle and music into a cohesive entity that will establish something of new standard of artistic effort in the cinema. How well he may have succeeded remains to be seen. The stage bill will be headlined by Gomez and Winona, a dance team that is known wherever terpsichorean artistry is in the air.

"Pursued" is the title of the melodramatic film feature that may be expected to enthrall lovers of the more violent forms of cinematographic entertainment at the lumbia next week. The principal roles are played by Victor Jory and Rosemary Ames. Russell Hardie is cast in the part of initial supporting work. The story, as the title implies, is one of strong contrasts, vivid highlights and sinister shadows. The bill will be completed by the usual house features of abbreviated length.

Loew's Palace for the next week, announces the holdover of "Judge Priest," the eminently suitable vehicle for the droll comedy talents of Will Rogers. This is one of THE pictures of the year. It is violently pro-South in its contemplation of the controversy between the North and the South, but it is bulky good fun for all that. It will be supported by the same auxiliary features that have added to the pleasure of this week's bill.

Another extended engagement is announced for the Metropolitan Theater, where Grace Moore in "The House of Rothschild" will continue her triumphant career for another week beginning tomorrow. Supported by Tullio Carminati, Henry Armetta, Luis Alberti and a long list of others, Miss Moore, in this gorgeous adaptation of grand opera to the films, renders the screen a genuine service. Appropriate short-reel subjects round out the bill.

RKO-Keith's Theater is enjoying one of the most prosperous runs in its history with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers in "The Gay Divorcee," and as a consequence is holding this delightfully breezy work over for another week. It may go on even beyond that, if it does, it will be for here is one of the real treats of the season. It has color, movement, charm and some extraordinary dancing by the star. Short reel subjects and a new issue of the Pathe News will complete the bill.

"The Nite Club Girls," which isn't a bad idea, will hold forth on the stage of the Gayety Theater as the burlesque attraction booked for the week beginning with Sunday matinee. The chief members of the cast are Ray Paine, Charles "Peanuts" Bohn, Max Coleman, Hazel Miller and Shirley Wayne.

Bristol Liquor Store Expected To Be Closed on December 11

Reported Plans for Contest of Vote Fail to Materialize.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—Closing of the State liquor store at Bristol, Va., appeared scheduled for December 11 tonight as information from the southwest Virginia city dispelled an impression that it might be kept open until a later date.

Earlier in the day Maj. S. Heth Tyler, chairman of the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, pointed out that, although it had been planned to close the Bristol store December 10, 60 days after the election in which citizens voted against its operation, study of the control act disclosed that the closing was not required until 60 days after the election result had been certified in a court order.

He said that the control board had not been informed of the entering of an order certifying the Bristol election and that, on the contrary, it had been reported that Bristol citizens were planning a contest of the result, which might delay the certification for some time. Later word came from Bristol that the court order had been entered October 12, and that no action has been instituted to contest the election. This presumably would require the store to be closed 60 days after October 12.

In discussing grounds upon which it was reported the election contest was proposed, Maj. Tyler pointed out that the control law specifies that referendum ballots shall be printed carrying two questions, one as to whether liquor shall be sold in the locality by State stores and the other as to whether licenses shall be issued for the sale of wine and beer.

Woman, 30, Seeks $5,000,000 As Widow of Aged 'Bachelor'

Logan, W. Va., Oct. 24 (AP).—A red-haired young beauty parlor operator, proclaiming herself the widow of a 75-year-old millionaire, garbed herself in mourning today for the funeral and prepared to claim his estate, which may amount to $5,000,000.

Louis R. Sweetland, who everybody thought was a bachelor, will be buried tomorrow in a country churchyard at Hamlin, near Huntington. He died of pneumonia in a Huntington hospital yesterday.

Thirty-year-old Nellie Stratton, who said she became the country financier's wife last February 24, expects to attend the funeral, but added a member of the Sweetland family had informed her he is not certain she will be recognized as the widow.

The belated romance of the aged bachelor began when Miss Stratton sought a position as a school teacher. He was a school board member.

Miss Stratton said: "I saw Mr. Sweetland frequently after our first meeting in his office. That was in July, last year. Later we met on many occasions and February 24 we were married in Pikeville, Ky."

"We kept it secret at the insistence of Mr. Sweetland, who said he didn't want to tell his family right away."

None of Sweetland's family knew about any marriage, however said, but the young woman said it was no secret among her friends.

In the case of the Bristol election the vote was taken on only one question—that involving the State store.

Word reaching the board is that advocates of liquor sale in Bristol are seeking to have the election result set aside because the second question was not put to the voters at the same time, their contention being that this might have altered the result of the vote as taken.

Rockefeller's Agent Studies Virginia Law

Richmond, Oct. 24 (AP).—Alfred L. Scott and Leonard V. Harrison, representing the liquor study commission sponsored by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., were in Richmond today interviewing members of the Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board and studying records of the operation of this State's control system.

Mr. Harrison recalled that last year a study entitled "Toward Liquor Control" prepared by Raymond B. Fosdick, and Mr. Scott and with an introduction by Mr. Rockefeller was published.

This year a follow-up study is made of the first year of repeal and the result probably will be published early in the spring. It is Nation-wide in scope and will include observations of the various types of State control systems and of the situations in States which have retained prohibition.

Price Slash Urged For Lumber Code

Drop of 14 Per Cent Asked by Hardwood Leaders.

Memphis, Oct. 24 (AP).—An approximate decrease of 14 per cent in minimum code lumber prices was recommended to the National committee of the Lumber Code Authority here tonight by leaders of the hardwood industry.

The recommendation was taken under advisement by the control committee, headed by C. Sheppard, of Clark, La. It will report to the NRA in Washington.

Opponents and proponents of price fixing looked upon the proposal as a "compromise" in their several weeks' controversy. Under the code minimum price scale now in effect as adopted by the NRA last July 20, the average price per 1,000 feet is $32.43, and under the schedule recommended tonight the average would be $27.91.

Natie Brown Given Draw With Mickey Walker as Fans Boo Decision

Thrilling Aerial Battle Is Expected in Yale-Army Classic Saturday

Cadets Face Improved Eli Team

70,000 Fans May See Traditional Feud at New Haven.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24 (AP).—Chiefly because of old Eli's startling improvement under a new coaching regime since the outbreak of the campaign, this week's Yale-Army game promises to draw the biggest crowd of the Eastern football season so far, develop a sensational aerial race for touchdowns and recapture its reputation for leaving the customers somewhat pop-eyed with excitement.

Not since 1921 has the famous Yale Bowl been filled anywhere near its capacity of around 75,000, nor have the Elis given the Cadets anything resembling an old-time scrap-in keeping with the best traditions of this rivalry. There may be no connection between the two circumstances, but close to 70,000 spectators may flock back to New Haven this Saturday to see what Ducky Pond's boys in blue, featuring an air-minded back field, can do about avenging the decisive defeat administered by Army's better-drilled forces in 1932 and 1933.

Since 1921, when the game was installed as an annual fixture, Yale and Army have usually collided with electrifying results.

Army Line Rebuilt

Of Army's last two brilliant eleven, Buckler and Capt. Joe Stancock, star blocking and punting back, are the only outstanding survivors. The Cadets have a rebuilt line which is likely to have trouble handling the fast-charging Elis, and their back field will have to be on the alert to combat the Blue's overhead attack.

On the theory that the best way to beat the passing game is to throw longer and better aerials, Buckler and his passing understudy, Maurice Simmons, will have instructions to open up any time Army is within scoring range.

"Yale has become air-minded under Pond's smart coaching," says Lieut. Garrison Davidson, West Point's head coach. "We know what to expect at New Haven and we are drilling to overcome certain weaknesses in our pass defense. At the time we hope to produce a more effective passing attack of our own."

Eli Improved.

Unbeaten but not seriously tested so far, Army may rule a slight betting favorite on past performances but Yale has the player resources and as well as sufficient confidence to turn the tables this Saturday, if the Blue's passes click the way they did against Brown. Moreover, the Elis are better drilled this season to work with the Army's power plays from wing-back formations. They also have a fast, shifty and hard-hitting back field combination, composed of Roscoe, Rankin, Morton and Whitehead, equipped to annoy any type of defense.

Virginia Grid Stars Point For Foes

Generals Oppose Tech, Cadets Play Gobblers in Twin Bill.

LEXINGTON, Va., Oct. 24 (Sp.).—Forty-four of the Old Dominion's best footballers will answer the call of the referee's whistle Saturday in the Washington and Lee-V. P. L. Virginia-M. I. games which will be the athletic features of homecoming week festivities here.

The Generals and Virginia Tech will be the first to answer the summons to duty. They are scheduled to kick off at a. m. Virginia and the Cadets will swing into action at 2:30 p. m.

Against Washington and Lee, the Gobblers will be faced with the task of bucking a Stowell Jackson line that held Stanford, Kentucky and Maryland records. Although steam-rollered by the hardy West Virginians, the Generals' latest scoring power reached full development against Princeton last Saturday. Fritz Crisler's highly regarded team defeated them by only two points.

Virginia, with only one victory over St. John's to its credit this season, will be hard pressed against the Cadets. Although V. P. L. has not acquired a victory yet, it showed its great advantage in holding the powerful Richmond eleven to a single touchdown last week.

The Cavaliers' troubles will be further increased by the probable absence from the game of Capt. Tommy Johnson, the captain who holds down the all-important full-back position, is recovering from injuries suffered in the Dartmouth game.

Benny Botnick and Norman Ochs, the V. P. L. crack guard combination, will be back in the fold against the Generals, ready to lead the assault. Coach Tex Tilson, Washington and Lee grid mentor, probably will call upon Preston Moore to replace his star end and punter, Bill Ellis. Ellis has an injured ankle.

Grill Quintet Starts

Oldest Grill basket ball team will hold its first drill of the season tonight at 8:30 o'clock at Roosevelt High School. The following players are requested to report: Dantz, Will, McNally, Thompson, Kemp, Mitchell, Gahan and Benham.

"BO" McMILLIN, of the V. M. I. back field, cousin of Centre's immortal, who will draw the full attention of the Virginia defense when these two teams clash Saturday.

PRESTON MOORE, who will direct Washington and Lee's passing attack against V. P. L.

"FOOTS" DICKERSON, elongated star of the V. P. L. back field, whose booming punts and running ability will be closely watched by the Generals Saturday when these two rivals meet at Lexington.

2,500 Watch Battle of Heavies

Early Lead Is Gained by Former Champ; Davis Winner.

By Bill McCormick.

MICKSY WALKER, the Rumson Toy Bulldog, returned to the heavyweight wars at the Auditorium last night. His opponents were Natie Brown, the rising heavyweight, and the officials duly elected by the Boxing Commission to judge the fight.

At the end of the scheduled ten rounds of fist-cuffing, the Mick had decisively beaten Brown, but he could not win from the officials, who declared the bout a draw. Judge C. Carroll Dunn balloted for Walker, Henri di Sibour cast his vote for Brown, and Referee Charley Reynolds rode the fence with a vote for a draw.

Throughout the entire encounter Walker worked smoothly, like the well-nigh perfect fighting machine he is. He ducked or blocked Brown's winding punches and fired his famed left hook with practically all the effectiveness of yore.

Walker Tops Brown.

Everything that Brown did, the Bulldog did just a little better. His left hook was far superior to Natie's left hook, and Natie's left hook is his best weapon. In close, Walker adroitly parried Brown's two-fisted attacks to the bracket, and Brown has won many of his fights with two-fisted attacks to the bracket. All of which will just give you an idea.

Utilizing a 27-pound weight advantage, Brown carried the fight to the little, elder almost throughout, but he carried it ineffectively. The local lad's best punch was a looping left to the body, from which the Mick took most of the sting with his elbow.

Cautious at Start.

The first round was even as they clinched and pawed cautiously feeling out. Walker gave warning of what could be expected by neatly parrying a short-lived attempt on the part of the Washington heavy to purp both hands, the body and lash out with a stinging left hook.

Walker took the second, which largely was dedicated to mirding wrestling. He took the third, one of the best of the entire fight. In this round, Walker threw a hard left hook and right cross to Natie's Brown recovered quickly, beating head, spinning him half around. off Walker's determined attack with a broadside of gloved fists.

The fourth round was more even, but still Walker, as Brown clinched repeatedly trying to figure out an answer to Walker's defense. In the fifth, Brown landed his first really solid punch—a right to the head. He was firing with both fists at the end of the round, which he took.

Natie's Head Target.

In the sixth, Walker repeatedly found Natie's head with his sizzling left hook to take the round by a wide margin. The seventh was even, with Walker acquiring an early lead but losing it when Brown opened a cut under his left eye with a hard right.

The eighth, ninth and tenth were Walker's. He doubled his lead with a wide margin. He spun Brown around several times with left hooks and almost ripped his head from his shoulders with right uppercuts.

Came the draw decision and a prolonged salvo of boos—the usual finish to a Washington fight card. Walker weighed 163; Brown, 189.

Roddy Davis, Washington lightweight, took a very unpopular six-round decision from Lou Terry, of St. Louis. The assembled patrons gave vent to one of the most lusty and concerted choruses of Brooklyn burps ever to shake these walls, but the die had been officially cast. Judge Henri di Sibour voted a draw, C. Carroll Dunn and referee Muggsy Morris cast ballots for Roddy.

Bill Bullock won a unanimous decision from Angelo Meola, of Baltimore in a six-rounder. The Washington lightweight outspeeded and outgeneralized Meola throughout to earn the award.

Don Petrin took a split decision over Mickey Taylor, Walker's chief sparring partner, in an interesting eight-round semifinal. Petrin was floored for no count in the third round, out on his feet in the sixth, shaken to his heels in the final, but the officials declared him the winner.

Outweighed 15 pounds, Petrin made the fatal mistake of trying to work in close on his 180-pound, 5-foot-4 opponent. Taylor hammered him mercilessly in the infighting, but inflicted the most damage with a long left hook to the head fired from long range. Judge Henri di Sibour and Referee Muggsy Morris rectified Petrin's mistakes by voting him the winner. Judge Carroll Dunn balloted for the rightful winner.

Team Celebrates.

Stanford Editorial Urges Grid Wages

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Calif., Oct. 24 (AP).—The student editor of the Stanford Daily advocated today that Pacific Coast college athletes, especially football players, be given open and above-board financial support.

The suggestion was received with a shrug of the shoulders by Prof. William Owen, president of the Coast Conference.

"It's an old, old story," said Prof. Owen, with explanations tending to indicate that the editors had a habit of reviving this subject at least once a year.

Athletes in every Pacific Coast institution are receiving "some sort of financial support, from one source or another," wrote Stanley Beaulaire in the student publication.

Urges "Inoffensive Care."

Editor Beaulaire urged an early meeting of the conference to lay the plans for "an inoffensive manner of taking care of varsity athletes." Conference President Owen said the regular conference meeting will be held in December.

"Everyone is entitled to his own opinion," replied Prof. Owen with the reminder that the Pacific Coast Conference had itself "investigated" through the medium of Jonathan Butler, of Chicago, whose findings resulted in virtually a repudiation of similar charges.

"The fellows who devote all of their spare moments to long, grueling practice periods rightfully believe they are entitled to some means of compensation for the loss of possible employment during those hours of training," wrote Editor Beaulaire.

Points to Scholarships.

"We think the conference as a whole has made pretty liberal arrangements for taking care of students, athletes or otherwise," countered the conference head. He pointed out that at Stanford 20 or so athletes and as many nonathletes hold tuition scholarships.

To the editorial statement "there is no horrible crime in waiving tuition or providing legitimate means of earnings adequate room and board," Prof. Owen replied. "There are any number of athletes earning their room and board at conference institutions. But the conference is opposed to a blanket policy of providing tuition and upkeep to all athletes."

University of California student leaders replied with an emphatic "no" to the Stanford editorial. President Alden Smith of the University of California Associated Students termed it a "proposal to buy football athletes by the ton" and "eloquent proof that college athletics and football in particular are decidedly, uselessly and needlessly overemphasized."

Wheatley Filly Wins Empire Feature

Dusky Princess Leads Field for First Time Since May.

EMPIRE CITY RACETRACK, Oct. 24 (AP).—The Wheatley Stable's Dusky Princess, a filly that often knocks at the door, won her first purse since last May, when she scored easily in the Hyde Park mile and 70 yards test that featured today's card.

The 3-year-old daughter of Flying Ebony had 4 lengths to spare over Andy Schuttlinger's even-money favorite, Portifera. W. C. Went's Prince Fox lost second money by 3 lengths.

Dusky Princess, ridden by the former Western newsboy, Charlie Rosengarten, ran the distance in 1:48.5 and won a receding second choice at 3 to 1.

A half dozen of the better class players went postward and got off to a good start. Rosengarten swung Dusky Princess to the fore around the clubhouse turn, but Portifera went right after her and hung on determinedly until the stretch. There, the Wheatley filly asserted her superiority in decisive fashion, moving well clear as if much the best. Prince Fox offered weak opposition for the place.

Contest Fans View Army As Easy Victor Over Yale

THE respect in which Army is held by football fans is strikingly illustrated by returns in The Postillon Football Contest as contest entrants, almost without exception, select West Point to defeat Yale by scores ranging as high as six touchdowns.

Again yesterday the Postillon Contest elicited hundreds of entries from Washington fans who are testing their football knowledge or occult powers, as the case may be. To the fan selecting the greatest number of winners among the 26 games listed below, The Post will award four choice seats to the George Washington-Vanderbilt game at Griffith Stadium one week from next Saturday.

On Saturday night, Harris B. Hull, The Postillon broadcaster, will include the scores of the game in his radio program conducted over Station WMAL.

To the fan with the second largest number of correct predictions will be given three seats to the same game. To the fan who places third, fourth, fifth and sixth two choice seats will be given.

The coupon below is for your convenience, although it is not necessary to use The Post chart.

Priority of receipt will govern the awards in case of ties.

Giants Urged to Rid Club of Bill Terry

Deal Would Be Good for Players, Fans, Writer Holds.

By Jimmy Powers (Pinch Hitting for Paul Gallico).

NEW YORK, Oct. 24 (Sp.).—Bill Terry is a good first baseman (he hit .352 last year); he can field and he can anticipate plays. I want to be fair, and give the man his due, because, you see, I am suggesting a very important baseball exchange today. Each time you swap a paper you read "Terry to swap Fliz," "Terry says Hub goes, or I go," "Terry feuds with Schumacker," "Terry to give Vergez and Ryan for Bartell."

Each day our Giant heroes, all the fellows we watched perform through the hot summer afternoons, go floating down the river. In the little autumn-painted horizon of our brain we catch a glimpse of their pathetic faces, one appealing look, one final despairing sigh and off they slide into the fog banks.

This Is a Sad Business.

Why, for all we hearless reporters know, there may be an Evangeline in a Bronx or Manhattan walk up breathlessly staring at each head of—er, the footlights—Joe Penner, "o-o-h, who-o-o-o, o-o-o, Wuh-o-o!" But—so long as men must work and women must weep, why not trade Terry himself? You say no other club wants him. Ah, now perhaps you are mistaken. Surely someone will take him. The Cubs need a first baseman. We might trade Terry for Dizzy Dean and let the Cubs have Rip Collins. We might get Gus Ruhf, of the Pirates. Gus knocked in 105 runs last year to Terry's lean 83. We could make a lot of good swaps for Terry. If it is fair to suggest the summary trade of a great star like Carl Hubbell, why should it be considered less majestic to suggest the trade of Terry?

Must Terry Be Nucleus?

Must Hubbell go? Must Fitz go? Must Jackson, Vergez and Ryan all go? Must the whole Giant ball club each spring be wrecked and each spring rebuilt around Terry? The record-breaking collapse of this autumn lies more with Terry than any individual on his team. Let us take Carl Hubbell's case. In '33 Carl won the pennant for the Giants. He was voted the most valuable player over Terry and he, more than anyone else, in the opinion of the judges, won the big money. Then what happened? Well, Terry signed himself to a five-year contract at $40,000. We asked him about Hub and he grinned and said, "Oh, I got mine; now let him try and get his." Hub, facing a top-heavy pay roll, was given a one-year contract at $18,000.

A one-year contract? Why that's what they give beginners! Hub swallowed his disappointment and went to Miami. Then began a grueling barnstorming tour of 38 games (Terry, anxious to impress President Stoneham, booked them all). The season opened and old Hub was in there chucking that cantaloupe. He pitched in 49 of the Giants 153 games. He was driven from bull pen to box, from bull pen to box again. Did you think Dizzy Dean was overworked? Look at the records. Hubbell, at Terry's orders, pitched more innings than Dean! Now, understand, I don't blame Terry. He was desperate. He wanted to protect his record, his corporation and his vanity. But he had a long contract; there was no risk of his future. Suddenly Hubbell's arm went dead on him. There were his muscles, his sole business assets, hanging lifelessly from his shoulder. Can you blame Hub for staring into the valley Terry's eyes and telling him, in choice language, his pent-up rage?

Am I right in saying that the fault with the Giants this year lay in their lack of spirit? One pep-

Football Rules In Carolina Today

Law Demands Clemson and Gamecocks to Meet at Columbia.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Oct. 24 (AP).—In probably the deepest obelance in the Nation to the gridiron game, Columbia and a good part of South Carolina will come to a halt in all activities at high noon tomorrow, for the thirty-second clash between the University of South Carolina and Clemson College.

By legislative statute the football teams of the two State institutions meet at noon on the fourth Thursday in October—fair week—and the day is a State holiday.

All official business ceases, school children get a holiday, stores close and staid Federal officers have ordered even postoffice activities to be suspended during the intra-State sport epic.

More Than a Game.

This may be putting what the educators call "undue emphasis" on football, but in South Carolina the meeting of Clemson and Carolina is more than just a gridiron contest; it is a major social event for the entire State.

Come years when the clubs are poorly matched, when the outcome is assured and still the game is a sell out. The breakfast parties are just as gay, the dances as bright as ever. Folk: from the plantations of the "low country" meet and mingle with friends from "up State." The game is important, but just a part of the day.

To show his impartiality, the Governor by tradition sits on one side of the field during the first half and on the other side during the second half. The Governor's change of seats, escorted by aids and representatives of the institutions, is the major ceremony during the interval between the halves. Gov. Blackwood will sit on Carolina's side for the first half tomorrow.

Teams Evenly Matched.

This year the teams appear evenly matched with Clemson, which has lost for three straight years, given the edge, if any. The Tigers have won only one of four games, but the losses were to major opponents—Duke, Georgia Tech and Kentucky. South Carolina has beaten Erskine, V. M. I. and The Citadel, but lost to N. C. State. Carolina and Clemson first met in 1896. It rained that year, but never a drop has fallen on a contest since and the forecast for tomorrow is fair weather. This is only the thirty-second game because they severed relations for several years after the 1902 contest ended in a riot.

Wheat Score Upturns In Late Sales

Gains Are Based on Belief That President's Speech Will Be Constructive.

Chicago, Oct. 24 (AP)—Late upturns in wheat prices today resulted more or less from buying on belief President Roosevelt's speech to Congress tonight would prove constructive.

Furthermore, there was a continued dearth of moisture in domestic winter wheat territory Southwest.

Wheat Closes Firm.

Wheat closed firm, 1/4 to 1/2 above yesterday's finish, May, 86 1/2 to 87 1/2; corn, 1/2 to 1/4 up; May, 77 to 77 1/2; oats, 1/4 to 1/2 up; May, 77 to 77 1/2; and provisions varying from 2 cents advance to an equal gain.

A surprise upturn in East-Indian wheat prices today was due to an early advancing trend in Liverpool. Liverpool dispatches expressed fear that too much rain had fallen over northern Argentina, and might cause rust to spread. When wheat prices in Chicago, however, had risen about a cent, a bushel, profit-taking sales brought about a temporary reaction to below yesterday's finish.

The transient setback was accompanied by considerable talk that with No. 2 red wheat lower in East-Indian markets than in Chicago, neither elevator owners nor speculators would continue to be willing to carry this variety of wheat from December to May here without a charge for storage, interest and insurance.

Rallies in Progress.

On the other hand, renewal of goldbugs about Argentine wheat crop conditions increased as the day drew to an end, with price rallies in progress. A leading Chicago crop authority said an average yield in prospect was all that could be seen in the present Argentine situation, even though augmented threats of a rust epidemic were not unfounded.

Other experts noted that low temperatures over large sections of the Argentine wheat belt pointed to possibility of frost tonight, and that a frost in Cordoba province at this time would be grave.

Corn and oats advanced higher with wheat most of the day. Shortage of feed grains of all kinds continued to be a factor.

Provisions were easy, influenced in the main by hog market downturns.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

SEEKING reasons why only 11 of the 800 employees at Federal Housing Administration are Alabama, two senatorial secretaries have just called on the FHA personnel office, it was learned yesterday. Hollis Black, secretary to Senator Hugo Black, and Charles B. Crow, secretary to Senator John B. Bankhead, are said to have pointed out that Alabama's quota at FHA is about 20 per cent of normal. Other senatorial calls are expected, notably from Missouri, whose representation at FHA is reported low.

BAKER.

Here arises a puzzling administrative problem. How will FHA, which a fortnight ago began a "shaking down" of personnel in which approximately 100 have been dismissed or demoted, make room for persons from poorly represented States?

As the FHA program reaches another stage in November, indications are that additional employees will be needed to operate check machines and handle other routine necessities by the program's progress.

Meanwhile, FHA's own "house cleaning" problem is being settled. About half of the personnel yesterday was moved from the congested area in the new Postoffice Building into the eighth floor of the old Southern Railway Building, next door.

Navy Department employees will be allowed a "reasonable" leave to go to their homes to vote on election day next month, according to an order issued yesterday by Assistant Secretary of the Navy, Henry L. Roosevelt.

GPO Concert Program.

Six spirited numbers are on the program of the Government Printing Office Orchestra and Chorus for presentation tomorrow in Harding Hall. They include "Semper Fidelis," "The World is Waiting for the Sunrise" (chorus), excerpts from the "Bohemian Girl," "The Winter Song" ("For All We Know," "On the Road to Mandalay," and, of course, "The Star-Spangled Banner."

William C. Buckingham, conductor, announces three new members of the orchestra—H. E. Carroll and H. Hicks, violinists, and R. P. MacConnell, trombonist. Miss Rita Dolphin (*), has joined the G. P. O. Chorus.

Among the soloists for the 1934-35 season will be Senorita Emilia Coloma, contralto; Harry Nestor, Gerald L. Whelan and John Green.

By George M. Adams, Jr.

OPPORTUNITIES for local amateur talent to break into radio are coming in a deluge. Close on the heels of WJSV's similar announcement yesterday comes word that WRC's "Washington Airbreaks," long the spring board for unknowns, is dissolved to give way to a new morning spot offering just five times as many opportunities for singers, actors and musicians.

Hereafter, N. B. C. will stage its amateur show, entitled "The Getter Upper," under the wing of Horace Hunnicutt, erstwhile "Doctor of the Blues," with a 7:30 to 8 a. m. free-for-all open to the same sort of material formerly attracted to "Airbreaks." Hunnicutt will conduct the program six days a week starting Monday, filling the spot with local talent selected from Wednesday evening auditions at WMAL at 8 p. m.

But another and more enticing opportunity also awaits. N. B. C. will select three of the best acts appearing during the week, from which will be chosen one act for a Fox Theater stage appearance Thursday nights. After 10 weeks, Loew's Fox will award a $1 to 28 weeks booking to one act from those appearing with Hunnicutt.

The show is sponsored, and even though we are sorry to see "Airbreaks" go, the additional opportunity offered is more advantageous. And fame seekers also are invited to try out at WJSV for its 7 p. m. show.

THERE'S a little vine-covered cottage overlooking the Potomac on the Mount Vernon highway slated for a lawn frolic tomorrow night when WJSV gives its astronomy broadcast. The cottage is WJSV's power house and sentry box for Bruce Geddes, engineer, who wiles away the lone hours by reading up on law.

But on the lawn at 11 p. m. if it's a clear night, will be one piano, Bob Trout, announcer, and Earl Heatwole, astronomist, who also is a WJSV transmitter engineer. Earl has monkeyed with telescopes for years and he will take full charge of instructing listeners into the mysteries of the firmament.

Geddes will bring a grand out on the lawn and play "I Saw Stars," as Trout and Heatwole examine the heavens. Chairs and lemonade will be provided.
